Rockie Horoscope { ROCKIE GARDINER }

SPLIT PERSONALITY

[MAY 21–JUNE 20]
Chances are you'll be more affected by Mercury's retrograde trip through Gemini than most. However, you're also the sign that knows how to best deal with retrogressions. Some Twins bite the bullet and go on a road trip, visiting family or friends from the past. Others assume that progress won't be made during retrograde, so they may as well take a vacation. Still others use retrograde periods to work on a project that's been tabled. Appreciative Venus in your sign until June 18 can make any choice worthwhile.

CANCER [June 21–July 22]
Friends and funding are linked together this week, and not in a particularly pleasant way. Affable Venus in your house of associates can encounter difficulties when it challenges sensible Saturn in your area of money earned. It might not be a big deal; still and all, who wants to be taken advantage of again? Mercury turning retrograde in Gemini won't have much of an effect on your waking life, but if your dreams are more memorable than usual or if you want to play the quintessential hermit crab, lay the blame on the littlest planet.

LEO [July 23–August 22]
Whether or not talking, writing or selling impacts your career, be aware that Mercury is retrograde in Gemini, the sign governing communication and commuting, for the next three weeks. That the turnaround occurs in your house of associates and group identification suggests that reaching these people or getting what you need from them ain't gonna happen—at least not the way you intend. Therefore, prepare to be frustrated and willing to revise your information or opinion when Mercury goes direct, the day before solar Cancer begins.

VIRGO [August 23–September 22]
An interesting interlude awaits you. Three planets in Gemini, the sign governing your career, places you very much in the forefront of what'll be happening. Magnetic Venus attracts attractive people—e.g., more artists—and the creative sun gives them the power to test your mettle. However, it's your Mercury ruler, retrograde from Memorial Day until June 19 that can drive you to distraction by not delivering what you want when you want it. Perhaps the universe has another plan, such as spreading your good name?

LIBRA [September 23–October 22]
Don't expect the trains to run on time. Mercury retrograde in your Gemini house of foreign travel and Neptune retrograde in your Aquarius house of recreation and risk could mean that you're going nowhere fast. But if you insist on taking that trip despite these warnings, you can always count on your artistic Venus ruler, also in Gemini, to see that you enjoy yourself. Since you're such a romantic soul, let's hope that the goddess will throw a love interest or two your way when Venus and Mars get busy on June 6.

SCORPIO [October 23–November 21]
Is something fishy going on at home? Neptune turns retrograde in your Aquarius house of family and foreclosures on Memorial Day. Because Neptune can be the source of fakery and fanatic behavior, check with relatives and/or your landlord before you follow your Mars coruler on tour. Mars in glamorous Leo is the quintessential show-biz position, a once-every-two-years transit that can change the direction of your life—specifically to far-away places with strange-sounding names, filled with natives who have romance on their mind.

SAGITTARIUS [November 22–December 21] Knowing that Mercury's latest retrogression takes place in your Gemini house of significant others could relieve you from having any expectations from any of them—at least until Mercury is free and clear again, around the July 4 holiday. If this seems like a long time to suspend judgment, so be it. Archers rarely have difficulty making quick adjustments, which is what the mutable (aka the common) signs do. Meanwhile the versatile Gemini sun and loving Venus provide distractions to keep you otherwise engaged.

CAPRICORN [December 22–January 20]
Three weeks of minor snafus involving your coworkers, misinformation about health matters and attempts to train the puppy can be chalked up to having Mercury retrograde in your Gemini house of service. It's your daily routine that gets affected, so prepare to suck it up for the duration. However, foggy Neptune turning retrograde in your Aquarius house of personal finances implies that you should be more vigilant about bank business as well as the purchases you make. Even the pragmatic Goat has been known to fall for a scam.

AQUARIUS [January 21–February 18]
As dreamy and desirable as you may appear, Aquarians should also be aware that when idealistic Neptune turns retrograde in your sign, some of your appeal can diminish. Veils tend to vanish and there you jolly well are, visible warts and all. Although the reversal has taken place in your sign for the last 10 years, it's primarily natives born around Valentine's Day who might lose some of their luster between now and Halloween. For the others, expect exciting times with impassioned partners thanks to fiery Mars in your Leo complement.

PISCES [February 19–March 19]
Relatives and real estate can be the subjects likely to be screwed with while Mercury is retrograde. For the next three weeks, and then some, try to avoid signing anything relating to family affairs, the house or the landlord. Even the garden could turn into an iffy topic for discussion, not to mention the garage and whatever is stashed there. Under these circumstances, you may feel unduly constrained; however, some of that feeling can be attributed to your Neptune ruler also turning retrograde on Memorial Day.

ARIES [March 20–April 19]
Seems like old times? Mercury and Neptune going into reverse ties together two areas of your solar chart, i.e., a group you sometimes join up with and the trips you occasionally take. Mercury retrograde in your Gemini house of communication and travel can mess with e-mail, airplane reservations, etc. Neptune retrograde in your Aquarius house of associates and aims you have in common may make those goals and the people advocating them more confusing than you originally thought. No biggie, just a warning.

TAURUS [April 20–May 20]
That's it; you're off the hook. Without a planet in Taurus calling attention to your every move, your every desire, you're able to fade into the woodwork and reclaim your privacy. Memorial Day weekend might be somewhat tricky, but that's because your sociable Venus ruler, newly placed in dualistic Gemini, is tested by stern Saturn in Virgo. Criticism from older family members? Two party invitations? Mercury retrograde in your house of assets and values suggests you delay making big purchases until the July 4 weekend is over.

Unlike the rest of your friends, we want to see the photos from your next trip. Where did you take us? Send us a picture of you or a buddy, or better yet, someone famous reading THE IMPROPER BOSTONIAN and tell us where you were. The wilder your destination and the more creative your photo, the better your chances of making the cut in the esteemed IMPROPER Sightings.

Nicole and Jaime Caron brought THE IMPROPER down to Tropicana Field in St. Petersburg, Fla., which would be easier to joke about if the Rays weren't playing better than the Red Sox.

Joe Scarborough and Mika Brzezinski, host and cohost of MSNBC's Morning Joe, loved their copies of THE IMPROPER, although Brzezinski thought we could have used more z's.

Bence Magyar and Christine Zisko checked out Fisherman's Bastion in Budapest, Hungary. This photo proves what we've been saying all along: Budapest boasts the most magnificent bastions in all of Hungary.

Ralph and Elizabeth Covino were all smiles on the beach in St. Lucia, as the island's United Nations mobile unit floated by in the background.

AT THE BALLET AND THE BPL

Jay Farraher Jr., Olympia Dukakis and Will Wilson at the Huntington Theatre's Spotlight Spectacular

Shake Your Groove Thang...

Despite being an abject reminder that most of us can't do splits in mid-air or crack walnuts with our butt cheeks, Boston Ballet's Dream Ball, held at the Cyclorama, was one helluva party.

A tribute to mega-philanthropists Joan and Ted Cutler, it was an everyone-who's-anyone affair, with a glittering guest list that included the likes of cochairs Nina and David Fialkow, vice-chairs Mark and Karolina Blodgett, celebrity chef Ken Oringer and the emphatically gorgeous Celine, makeup mogul Coco Grace, the swanlike Trevania Henderson, balletomanes Marjie and Bob Kargman, the eternally lovely Littlechilds, Ruth and Laura, über-fashionista Betty Riaz, and so on and so forth.

Dinner was accompanied by performances by the dancers, and after dessert and coffee practically everyone got into the groove.

"After all," said one guest, "how often do you get to grind up against dancers you normally pay to see on stage?"

Writers Bloc...

As always, the Associates of the Boston Public Library's annual Literary Lights Dinner was a highly edifying affair, honoring local authors and attended by an elite crowd.

Held in the grand ballroom of the Park Plaza, the tables were strewn with books written by the honorees, and the room was lit almost entirely by candles, prompting one guest to joke, "If we wanted to, we could have a book burning!"

Boston Ballet soloist James Whiteside and corps member Dan Donigan at the Dream Ball

Present and accounted for: outgoing library president Bernie Margolis (who got a rousing standing O), board chair Vivian Spiro, the super-fabulous Cassandra Irvine, regal do-gooder Betsy Hall, the amazingly charitable Barbara Alfond, doughnut magnate Bob Rosenberg and the flawless Mary Woolfson, and one guest who muttered, "Jesus Christ! You can't swing a dead cat in here without hitting a Pulitzer Prize winner."

Indeed, between the honorees and the prominent authors recruited to introduce them, not to mention the keynote address by hilarious Harvard chaplain Peter Gomes, it's one of the very few black-tie events where the speeches are actually worth listening to, offering a reminder that unless you have something interesting to say, it's best to stay seated and keep your mouth shut.

Billy Bulger and Vivian Spiro at Literary Lights

TMI...

Few things could be funnier than watching the well-bred ladies of the Vincent Club (which raises money for women's health at MGH) being subjected to a graphic gynecological lecture during an otherwise lovely luncheon.

The fundraiser, held beneath a tent on the grounds of the hospital, attracted such blue-bloods and Brahmins as Hope Baker, Carla Cabot, Meredith Clapp, Susan Hunnewell, Mary Kay Holder, Debbie Lewis, Beth Johnson, Lee Sprague, etc., etc., and while it was undeniably educational, the research presentation, entitled "From Fertility Preservation to Delaying Menopause: A 13-Year Retrospective," seemed to go on for about that long.

There were more than a few whispers—and jokes along the lines of "How do they get the mice to put their legs up in the stirrups?"—but for the most part, the extremely ladylike crowd stifled both their laughter and their boredom, politely soldiering on until the lecture was over.

Then it was time to announce the winner of the raffle prize: a gold and diamond Atlas watch from Tiffany, prompting one woman to hiss, "I wish they'd given it to the speaker."

Chin Up—Both of Them...

It's always interesting to see who's going to turn up at the Huntington Theatre's Spotlight Spectacular gala, held this year at the Back Bay Sheraton.

The interesting, eclectic crowd included petite fashion plate Dola Stemberg, the incomparable Marilyn Keane and her affable other half, John, blonde bombshell Suki Forbes Bigham, bazillionaire honorees Disque and Carol Deane, and Academy Award winner Olympia Dukakis, looking so good that one prominent woman said, "I want her plastic surgeon," to which a friend responded, "I want her plastic surgeon 10 years ago." ×××

Home Cooking

Back in college, I discovered a restaurant in the Virginia countryside where the chef pulled dinner from the garden. Customers sat on a screened porch at wooden tables with mismatched mugs, digging into bowls of fresh produce. A guy, worn and wrinkled by life, played the banjo for good measure. At the time, it felt innovative. I wasn't in Berkeley, Calif., after all.

That experience is becoming easier and easier to find in the current climate. Diners don't even have to leave the city. Amidst soaring gas prices and environmental concerns, the local food movement—eating responsibly and regionally—has gained tread, a development Nick Altschuller explores.

Will Gilson is an exemplar of the trend. At the age of 25, Gilson's made a name for himself with his Cambridge gastropub Garden at the Cellar. He's the kind of guy who can spin a tale about basil that leaves you hungry to learn more. I spent a delicious day with him on the farms where he grew up, tasting herbs and talking sustainability.

Back in Boston, Lydia Shire needs only one dish to demonstrate the power of homemade ingredients at her hot spot Scampo. Shire's mozzarella makes cheese into art. Andrew Rimas delves into the sweet stuff, which has its own "bar" at the eatery and graces our cover. Like so many things in this issue, it's straightforward and full of flavor.

You guys crack me up!

[What] you published about laying a wreath at the old Armani Cafe with a headstone reading "RIP Eurotrash" ("Newbury Street Special," April 16–29) was simply pathetic!!

OK, I am European and have lived here in Boston for 30 years (I'm 36), but I hate to break it to you guys that Americans live for European designer clothing. I used to see a lot of American jackasses lounge around Armani Cafe with their fake Armani-wear with big letters going across their chest A-R-M-A-N-I... LOSERS!!!

Why not have the word LOSER written on their shirts? Because that's what they are, to put [it] in simple terms. When you walk around Copley or on Newbury, notice what most people are wearing. That's right, EUROCLASS clothing: Armani, Prada, Cavalli, Miu Miu, Gucci, Dolce & Gabbana, and the list goes on, friends.

I think I'll take a walk down by the Pour House and check out the American trash that loves to wear flip-flops when it's, like, 50 degrees. L-O-S-E-R-S!!

Hiss! Hiss!

Hey Ezra,

Re: your cats article in the Bartenders Issue ("Pussy Galore," May 14–27): How do you know what the cat was thinking? You seem to think you're an expert on cats. You know nothing, nothing about these animals except the fact that you are not deserving to be in their presence. It is good to know that you won't be taking care of this one anymore. Cats can stay on their own as long as they... forget it. I'm not taking the time to explain this to you. Well, anyway, just wanted to respond to your article. Next time, maybe you should keep your comments to yourself. Nothing personal. Oh, by the way—I've enjoyed the magazine for years.

Almost Quick and Easy

Greetings!

First let me congratulate chef Andy Husbands for a great recipe ("One-Hibachi Hit," May 28–June 10). The grilled tuna with sweet potato salad and asparagus was a beautiful, delicious and healthy meal that my husband and I enjoyed this evening.

However, I have two points to address. First, the article states: "His task: Create an upscale meal that could easily be prepared at the beach... We wanted to cook every ingredient at the same time, on one little hibachi—because hauling a Weber to the shore just wasn't going to happen." I thought that what followed would be quick and easy. This wasn't quite the case since the sweet potatoes needed to be cooked and the asparagus blanched—easy enough to do in a kitchen, but a bit daunting on a hibachi on the beach. Second, to save time, the first step of the recipe should be to begin cooking the potatoes, since the dressing preparation can be done while the potatoes are doing their thing. I wouldn't hesitate to bring this meal to the beach or to a Cambridge Boat Club Shandygaff; however, I would have my veggies and dressing prepped at home and ready to go. Thanks for adding to my summer grilling repertoire!

CLAWS AND EFFECT

In the turbid waters of the Barking Crab's biggest lobster pot, Daniel Pineda-Recinos turns shellfish into attractive, mid-priced dinners. As a sauté cook behind the scenes of one of Boston's most iconic seafood restaurants (a new location is opening this month in Newport, R.I.), Pineda-Recinos works eight hours a day, six days a week, wreaking havoc on lobsters, halibut, swordfish and, of course, crab.

"I never get bored of fish," says Pineda-Recinos, 29. "We eat, that's how we live. So it's fun to work in a kitchen. My ambition is to be a cook."

Pineda-Recinos moved to East Boston from his native El Salvador eight years ago, but he's been working in kitchens all his life. Fish is a big part of El Salvadoran cuisine—he's especially partial to fresh halibut with rice and vegetables—so when Pineda-Recinos arrived in New England, he took to the local fare like a Dungeness crab to melted butter.

On a busy day, Pineda-Recinos boils up to 100 lobsters in a shift. "You have to change the water every three hours," he says. "The biggest pot can hold 10 or 11 lobsters at a time." That's regular lobsters, not creeping monsters like the 18-pounder he recalls boiling two years ago. But the big ones never take a snap at his fingers.

"It's the small ones that hurt the most," he says. "They're the fastest."

Drink of the Moment

Margarita Makeover

When you face an intimidating wine list, a helpful sommelier will lead you to the right selection. If you can't decipher a cocktail menu, a good bartender will do the same. Just tell them what you like.

Rocca's cocktails take classic drinks and dress them in Ligurian clothing, reflecting the region of the restaurant's inspiration. For a Cape Codder fan, bartender Carrie Janik will suggest a Strata 6A ($10) with pear vodka, cranberry juice, basil and ginger beer. For the Cosmo connoisseur, it's the Blu Riviera ($12) made from huckleberry vodka, blueberries, lemon and mint. And if you came to an Italian restaurant craving a margarita, your drink is the Inferno ($10).

"Tequila by itself is great because it's strong and masculine," says Janik, but accompanied by thyme, lime and jalapeño, its usual macho role changes. "With this drink, the savory flavors and the spice come through, so you would definitely have a second or third," explains co-owner Gary Sullivan. "The tequila cleanses it."

The Inferno is cleaner and brighter than the standard margarita. It packs the same punch, but against your puritanical judgment, you keep reaching for the glass because it's so refreshing. Or that could be the muddled jalapeño, a building wave of flavor that crosses the palate and chases the cold liquid down your throat.

"There's a nice arc to the drink," Janik says. "At first the jalapeño is slight, and at the end you're ready for the hit." "Like a Barolo," Sullivan adds, a nod to those of you who dabble mostly in wine.

NICK ALTSCHULLER

Question for Mudge Vilar

What annoys you about Boston diners?

Mudge Vilar is a longtime server at Al Dente on Salem Street in the North End.

1. People like to ignore you when you go over. You'll stop by the table to see how everything is going and if they want anything, and one person will say, "Can I have a Coke, please?" Then you bring it over and someone else is like, "Oh, can I have a Sprite?" You go back again, and the other guy says, "Can I have a Bud Light?" You didn't know you wanted something to drink the first time I came over?

2. You try and be nice and bring over as many dinners as you can at once, but if there's a table of four, I can only bring three trays at once. That's all I can carry. You give them the food and immediately the fourth person says, "Oh, I had a ravioli coming..." I know you did. I'd balance the fourth plate on my head if I could, but three is all I can carry.

3. A lot of diners just don't know their pastas. They need to get their macaronis straight. The other day a [guy] came in and kept on trying to order the lobster ravioli with homemade pasta. I asked him if that meant he wanted two dishes, but he didn't understand. He didn't know that ravioli was a pasta.

Fried Green Peas

In the kitchen, it's a foolproof technique. Want to make something taste better? Fry it. Then douse it with aioli. That formula prevails at Persephone in Fort Point. Which isn't to say Michael Leviton's fresh-focused menu looks to hide the healthier ingredients. On the contrary, dishes like this trio of crunchy croquettes, practically bursting with sweet peas, pay homage to the local bounty—not to mention the seasonally aware Greek goddess. Even veggie-phobes will want a bite.

Show Chardonnay the Love

Because wine is a fashion and sometimes viewed as a personal expression, overexposure tends to breed contempt for many of the old standbys. In our rush to embrace the newest trend, a varietal may lose our favor. But chardonnay shouldn't be forgotten. It has been the dominant grape in our market seemingly forever. There are valid reasons for this, not least of which is its flavor profile: smooth and sometimes creamy, with just enough acidity to be refreshing and understated fruit essences that adapt to all kinds of food. Since it's grown almost everywhere, there are abundant stylistic variations to suit diverse palates. It also tastes equally fine dressed up in oak or down in stainless steel. Here are three beauties, each from historic wineries.

Stag's Leap Wine Cellars "Karia's" Chardonnay, Napa Valley, 2006 ($36, Lower Falls Wine, Newton) This is a "wow" chardonnay from the producer who helped put California on the world wine map a number of years ago with their stunning cabernets. From the introductory whiffs of toasty vanilla, caramel apple and cinnamon, this young chardonnay shows it has major-league stuff. There's plenty of lemony fruit down the middle to balance the richness and a long, clean finish to make a terrific match for grilled chicken or fish. This swept the field in the company of several other big-name chardonnays in tastings; it's a definite "run, don't walk" selection if you like the fuller style.

Martin Ray Chardonnay, Russian River Valley, 2005 ($20, Ourglass Wine, Saugus) A pioneer of quality production in California going back to the 1940s, Martin Ray focuses on using mountain and hillside grapes for the lush, intense, fruity imprint they leave on a wine. Originating from vineyards in the cool Russian River Valley's upper slopes, this medium-bodied, oak-aged chardonnay has ripe pear and nutlike aromas, with honeyed, toasted apple and spice accents. It's rich enough to work beautifully with king crab.

Wente Family "Morning Fog" Chardonnay, Livermore Valley, 2006 ($14, Wine Emporium, Boston) This is a venerable, family-owned producer (the oldest continually operating one in California) in a region due east of San Francisco that's totally off the radar screen. For years the Wente name was synonymous with quality chardonnay; in fact, many of California's best vineyards are planted with "the Wente clone" of the grape. Although eclipsed in the recent past, Wente has reinvented itself with a huge focus on sustainable growing practices. This wine has got the low-key side of chardonnay's personality down: lots of melon, apple and floral characters with a mild, easy-going but persistent flavor. Try it with pasta in a mushroom cream sauce.

Going Out

HAMBURGER-LER

Four Burgers, the new venue from Michael Bissanti, co-owner of the Paramount bistro on Beacon Hill, is unabashedly literalist. With a menu comprising exactly four burgers, it's the most candid name for a restaurant since Hooters.

"I saw burger places in California and New York," says Bissanti. "And there was nothing in Boston that was a cool place dedicated to burgers. Not just hamburgers. Burgers." He decided that a purely burger menu was a solid foundation on which to build a restaurant (or, dare to dream, a chain?). There is precedent.

Bissanti's four burgers are a cheeseburger, a veggie burger with guacamole, a turkey burger with cranberry chutney (all $7) and a salmon burger with sesame slaw ($8.50). And that's it. There's a nod to side dishes like homemade waffle chips, house-cut fries and green salad ($3 and under), and you can get a Toscanini ice cream milk shake ($5.50). All the beef comes from the same farm that provides the steaks for Grill 23, and the salmon, turkey and cheddar cheese are "all-natural." To add to the eco-consciousness, the light bulbs are low-energy and the toilets are water-efficient. "Everything's composted and recycled," says GM Kalev Jaakson.

The 38-seat dining room sports an austere aesthetic—metal seats, clean red tiles and an open kitchen—while the 24-person patio is just a few feet away from the human crush of Central Square. Bissanti hopes to attract customers with an ontological marketing slogan: "Four burgers. Which one are you?"

"Me? I don't want to give you the politically correct answer," he says. "But I'm all four."

COP SHOCK

TO THE FAT BOSTON POLICE motorcycle officer who was outside 245 Summer St. on May 15 at 3:50 pm:

I appreciated you stepping in front of my parked car to yell at me to move my "fing car" from the no-parking zone. Your "motivational speech"—apparently titled "MOVE IT! Move it, NOW!"—was quite inspirational as I tried to pull out into a lane already bumper-to-bumper with traffic, and with only a foot of space to move into. Your knowledge of physics is astonishing. You're right, I don't want to be parked with you in front of me. I actually never want to see your face again. You calling me a "dhead" as I pulled away at your request was exemplary behavior from one of Boston's finest. You demonstrate how many police officers think they can talk to regular civilians as if they're above everyone else, with no need to be courteous or kind—no need to be civilized in your job. If you were having a bad day, there's no need to take it out on a complete stranger who is just picking up a friend. If you hate your job, take the responsibility to change your life. Don't take it out on those you claim "to serve and protect."

"Served and Protected"

To the driver of the gold SUV, license plate 485 M35:

I'm the girl you intentionally tried to run over near the Galleria. You are a fing idiot. Since I didn't get a chance to smash your windows, I hope public humiliation will wipe that smug smile off your face.

Angry Pedestrian

Dear age-inappropriate flirt:

It seemed like a typical special-events night at the museum. But you saved me from an awful night of observing drunken townies listening to bluegrass music, reprimanding men who brought in their own whiskey and taking tickets at the door. I wasn't expecting much, what with this particular band's fan base. Yet you were wearing jeans instead of jean cut-offs and actually had hair on your head versus everywhere else. We had a pleasant conversation about art, books and New York. And then, when the quintessential moment arose [to get my] number, you asked, "So, do you have a MySpace?" Do I look like the girl who is opposed to the movies, or drinks before dinner? Apparently, I struck you as the cyberspace type.

Sincerely,
Flattered, Now Creeped Out

To the woman who backed into my car twice on my way to work:

You and I were having a rough morning. The roads were being resurfaced and the traffic was horrific. I followed you into a parking lot to take a detour, when for some unknown reason you shifted into reverse and hit my front bumper. As you emerged from the driver's seat you somehow managed to back up and hit me a second time. I'm sorry if you heard the obscenities I screamed in frustration, or if I offended you with a menacing glare. I didn't know you were searching for the hospital across the way. I didn't know if you needed help, or if you were in distress about a loved one. I should have asked. Whatever the case, I hope you're okay.

JEFF BARRY OWNER OF BOSTON ORGANICS, A FOOD HOME-DELIVERY SERVICE

If you use the organic label, it basically means that your products are grown without any synthetic chemicals and pesticides, but to me it mostly means that your products are grown without having a major negative impact on the environment. There is a federal organic certification process that includes specific guidelines that growers must follow to use the organic label.

So I find myself sitting with my hand on my hip, exclaiming "Jiao!" for 30 seconds. It's all part of the signature massages at Chuan Body + Soul, which recently opened its first U.S. location in the Langham Hotel. The rubdowns are based on the five Wu Xing elements: metal, wood, water, fire and earth. After completing a 10-question survey, which asked about my favorite color and my general mood in the morning, I learned that my wood needed some attention. Turns out, that element governs some important stuff like the liver, gall bladder, tendons, ligaments and sense of sight. Following the meditation, my masseuse used special oils, incense and teas to get me back on track. And it only took 90 minutes. New-agey for sure (I've never been one to "om"), but the spa boasts all the high-tech bells and whistles, plus two fitness floors, a rejuvenation bar and an indoor lap pool.

STELLA ARTOIS

Perfection HAS ITS PLACE

A perfectly poured Stella Artois is the Gold Standard of Belgian beer.

Step One THE PURIFICATION

The bartender selects the signature glass for the beer being poured. The glass is scrubbed in a cool-water bath, preferably with a mild detergent. It's then rinsed with cold water to chill the glass.

Step Two THE SACRIFICE

The tap is opened in one swift motion to let the first burst of foam flow away. It must never enter the glass, thus ensuring every drop of beer is fresh.

Step Three THE LIQUID ALCHEMY

The glass is held at a 45-degree angle to create the perfect balance of liquid to foam.

Step Four THE HEAD

The head is created by straightening and lowering the glass. The foam is visually appealing and releases the beer's aroma.

Step Five THE REMOVAL

The bartender closes the tap in one quick action and moves the glass away from the faucet to ensure no drops spoil the perfect head.

Step Six THE BEHEADING

While the beer is flowing over the edge of the glass, the bartender cuts the head gently with a head cutter at a 45-degree angle. This eliminates the larger bubbles that burst easily and accelerate the dissipation of the head.

Step Seven THE JUDGMENT

The bartender now stands in judgment. The beer's head should be two fingers thick.

Step Eight THE CLEANSING

The bartender then rinses the bottom and sides of the glass. This keeps the glass clean and cool and makes it comfortable to hold.

Step Nine THE BESTOWAL

Suspense! Conflict! Drama! At the Vet's!

ANYONE WHO'S TAKEN a beloved animal to the vet knows the anguish of seeing your "baby" go into that chamber of jabs, scalpels and wordless howling. But for Dr. Nick Trout, that same setting is an engaging, novel-like adventure, full of complex characters. Trout, an Englishman, manages to give us the whole picture, wittily and with wry affection, in Tell Me Where It Hurts. A skilled, compassionate surgeon, he blends the technical with the juicy—we're inside, pressing on those squishy organs alongside him. The "parents" (he nicknames one couple the Stonewalls) can be high-maintenance. We see them agonizing over decisions like subjecting a dog or cat to derring-do, life-saving, often astronomically priced (occasionally even plastic) surgery. Or whether, alas, to invite in Dr. Catvorkian for a peaceful euthanasia. In one touching story, Mr. Hartman, a bereft widower, brings his dog Sage in for surgery. His no-nonsense, technically human daughter, Dr. Hancock, sees Sage as "an it, as a belonging, as an inert consumable," setting her at loggerheads with Dad about putting Sage down. Part therapist, part secret ally to Hartman, Trout Supermans inside Sage's tummy and saves the (dog) day. PILLAR OF SOCIETY China and other housewares

Beautiful Flavors of the Past

THIS IS A SHOP WHOSE LOCALE and homey building spill their offerings out onto the street. Red Pillar sells antiques and accessories of a vintage flavor, and anything you find here will ooze a classy, old-Brookline feel that verges on English. Early 19th-century tea sets have busy blue patterns edged in gold; interestingly shaped plates display different animals. They also offer the aristocratic delicacy of Meissen china and the peasant-textured complexity of Majolica. A tall china bunny holds a lettuce-covered vase. Bypassing utilitarian blandness are vividly painted metal wastebaskets; a red one shows a soldier striding towards you. Others blossom with flowers—oh, happy trash! They have old-fashioned toys filled with beads you can warm and use as a heating pad or a cozy pal. New but nostalgic-looking are Molly Batchelder's framed prints of country ladies in gowns cavorting whimsically with piggies and sheep, festooned with garlands. Batchelder's painted furniture imbues a deep vermilion texture to otherwise-ordinary side tables, while decapitated desktops have become shelves—now those are pretty, old.
The Red Pillar (6 Davis Ave., Brookline Village; 617-734-2696; theredpillar.biz) sells decorative arts.

Choco Chill We all slurped Swiss Miss and sippy boxes of Yoo-hoo as kids, but our tastes have refined some since then. At his charming chocolate emporium, Larry Burdick creates a connoisseur's cocoa—meaning the only ingredients in the mug are rich Grenada shavings (available in dark, milk or white) melted by steaming whole milk. Now that the weather's warm, ask the barista to plop a couple of ice cubes into the mix or to blend it into a refreshing frappe.

SOFRA, SO GOOD

Sortun and Kilpatrick to open café

THE GASTRONOMIC GODS have smiled upon Ana Sortun. By professional standards, Sortun's a most successful chef—winner of a James Beard Award, owner of Oleana (one of the area's top restaurants) and author of a well-received cookbook. And her personal life is a striking complement: She's married to farmer Chris Kurth, whose 50-acre property supplies produce to Oleana and a few other select restaurants.

Her plate may be full, but she's somehow making space to include a soon-to-open Middle Eastern bakery and cafe called Sofra. Partnering with longtime Oleana pastry chef Maura Kilpatrick, Sortun says the casual eatery will feature a hummus bar, sandwiches made with flatbreads baked in-house on a Lebanese griddle that "looks like an upside-down wok," and a stand brimming with Kurth's fruits, vegetables and herbs.

Maura Kilpatrick and Ana Sortun

With banquettes covered in Turkish kilims and low copper tables, Sofra will be "very casual, not a place to dine," says Sortun. Located on the western edge of Cambridge at 1 Belmont St., Sofra will be open daily this month or by early July.

More than a rumor, less than a press release: All-Star Sandwich Bar is "in the process" of being sold, says owner Chris Schlesinger. Devotees need not fear, however: The prospective buyers are "a couple of young guys who plan on keeping it open exactly the same," Schlesinger asserts.

In what's likely a reflection of the dismal economy, Restaurant Benatti in Inman Square is apparently on the market. Open less than six months, the eatery has garnered plenty of praise, but given the location and the menu's price points—pasta in the low $20s, meat in the $30 range and dinner service limited to six evenings from 6 to 9:30 pm—the numbers probably aren't adding up

Dining { ERIN BYERS MURRAY WITH BARBARA LYNCH }

BANQ-ING ON IT

A new South End restaurant crosses the map.

IT'S ALL THE WAVE Barbara Lynch enjoyed the room as much as the grilled cod.

FOR A POWERHOUSE restaurateur, Barbara Lynch can be pretty unassuming. I walked right past her at the bar inside Banq the night we met for dinner. The chef-owner of No. 9 Park holds court over a mini empire including B&G Oysters, the Butcher Shop, the cooking demo space and library Stir, catering business Niche Catour and produce shop Plum. She's also opening a dining complex in Fort Point.

It's quite a portfolio, yet the sharp-featured brunette practically disappeared in the crowd that night. Well, at least to me. I soon realized that the collective eyes of the staff at Banq had already spotted her, pegging her as a VIP. As a manager walked us to our table, I caught a glimpse of Barbara at work. She lobbed a few questions at him, inquiring about the server stations and dining room arrangement before we even got to our seats.

The room itself looked like a stylized cavern. Anchored by a Banyan tree–like skeleton of blonde wooden planks, the ceiling seemed to radiate out in undulating curves. We sat in a tall wooden booth, and I could tell Barbara was observing the space and the way everyone moved through it. Later, she told me that she calls it "the ballet."

Our booth faced the room, so we had front-row seats for the night's performance. Barbara took charge with the wine list and quickly fired away at our eager, tattooed server. "What's the 'bin' list all about? Tell me about it. Would you recommend something from it?" The bin list features wines that are almost sold out (so a little cheaper), but nothing struck her the right way, and we went with a bottle of Domaine Hippolyte Sancerre ($48) off the regular list.

The menu was broken down into Asian amusé plates (small bites), appetizers and entrees. We decided to order a range of dishes to get a scope of the French-Asian theme. Our first round included quail and date triangles atop a bed of pepper slaw ($5)—Barbara couldn't actually taste any dates—and duck confit samosas ($5): triangular fried dumplings nestled over a sweet-and-sour jammy scallion relish that got a faint kick from tamarind. They were crunchy on the outside and full of juicy meat on the inside. Barbara's friend Sarah, who joined us for dinner, ordered the flash-seared Vietnamese shrimp ($12), our favorite of the bunch.

Grilled cod

As we shared bites of each other's dishes, Barbara filled me in on the cookbook she's working on, which is based on the recipes used at Stir (the release is set for spring 2009). At one point she stopped mid-sentence to quickly jot down a note: "Knife skills. We should offer a knife skills class at Stir." We talked about her restaurants and what her day involves while trying to oversee five kitchens (she spends a full month in each before rotating to the next) and the four male chefs who run them. She let out a laugh as she tried to describe them. "I love them all. They're so different but perfect for the kitchens they're in," she said. The mother in her (she has a 4-year-old daughter, Marchesa) appeared a moment later. "I don't know where they'll all be in five years, but they're with me now, and I want to give them whatever tools they need."

With dinner, we ordered a bottle of Huber Zweigelt ($29). "It's like a cross between a fruity pinot noir and a zinfandel," she said. "Cat [Silirie, wine director at No. 9] would be so proud." It was a nice match with the Côtes du Rhône–braised short ribs ($23), a whopping portion of juicy ribs piled beside scallion-and-cumin yams. The grilled cod ($26) rested on three thick slices of lotus root laced with a "Provençal" mixture of herbs, which led to a discussion about where lotus roots and Provence had ever been connected in the past. For its part, the fish was flaky with a hint of grilled smokiness. Barbara ordered the appetizer mung bean and mushroom crêpe duo ($11) as her entree, admitting that she'd been nibbling on roast chicken at the Butcher Shop before coming to dinner. "It was that or chocolate, so I went with the salty," she said.

We wrapped up by sharing a chocolate torte ($10) and a last glass of pinot noir. Walking out of Banq, we agreed that the food swung in wildly different directions depending on the item. The space, meanwhile, was fun and a total scene. "I'm glad we came. I really want to support the neighborhood, and this is a good business for it," Barbara said. "Plus, I love any excuse to get out of work for a little while." ✖✖✖

THE UNIT

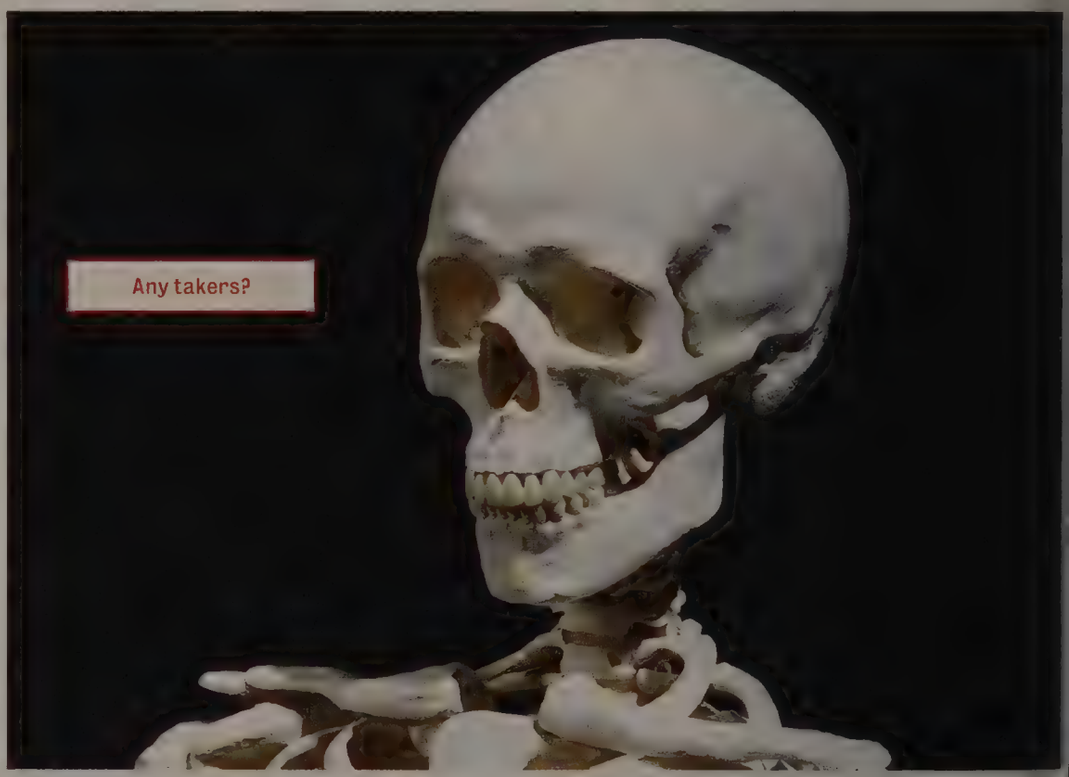
It's cheap thrills at a storage auction in Southie.

EVER WONDER what happens when you stop paying your rent on a storage unit? Me neither, but recently my buddy Krishan was at his storage unit when he noticed an auction in progress down the hall. People were gathered around an open unit, bidding on the contents. Evidently there were several deadbeat renters in the building, and the time had come to cut off their locks and sell their stuff to the highest taker. "You've got to go to one of these auctions," Krishan informed me. "You'd love it." Krishan apparently sees me as the type of person who'd find tawdry entertainment in a live bidding war over strangers' junk, in which respect he's absolutely right.

The two of us arrive at Castle Self-Storage in Southie for an 11 am auction, one of four in the area that day. I introduce myself to Paul Maglio, the auctioneer, who explains the ground rules: The lock is cut off, the door opens, and everyone gets a chance to peer inside. But you can't actually go in or open any boxes. When bidding is over, everyone moves to the next unit, and the winner has 24 hours to clean out his stash. This sounds to me less like a lucrative business than a chore. If I wanted to clean up a bunch of useless junk, I'd stop avoiding my own basement.

I ask Maglio to name the weirdest stuff he's ever discovered in a storage unit. "A body," he says. "Down in Connecticut. The guy was executed." That one was cold storage, in case you're wondering. "Another time there was a complete human skeleton, like for teaching at a medical school. And inside one unit, we found a pretty complete sex shop." A guy standing nearby, Rob, chimes in that he once found a couple of ornate saddles in a unit he'd bought. Krishan asks if he kept them, and Rob replies, "Well, no. There wasn't a horse." It turns out that storage-auction humor can be pretty dry.

The lock is cut off the first unit, and the crowd clusters around the entrance. Front and center is a large winged-gargoyle figurine that's clutching a bloody skull in its left claw. "Jimmy, that'll look great on your lawn," says Maglio. Bidding starts at $100 and reaches $200 on the strength of a sword in a glass case that's back in the corner. Is the sword worth at least $200? I have no idea, and really, neither does the guy who won it, which is part of the excitement. "Better than a scratch ticket!" says Maglio.



Bidding reaches $200 on the strength of a sword in a glass case.

There are many reasons that people default on their storage payments, but I can probably guess the story behind the next unit up for bid. There are four sets of crutches, two walkers and a bunch of prescription bottles amongst a towering pile of detritus. Inside a clear plastic storage bin, I can see an AARP card. If I had to guess, I'd say the owner of this lot has opened a new account at the great storage unit in the sky. The high bid is $225, which seems like a lot. Then again, I'll admit that I don't have a thorough understanding of the local used-crutch market.

The next unit contains a single, solitary roller grocery bag. Its contents are a mystery. Nobody's bidding. Finally, someone bids $10. Maglio asks if anyone wants to go to $15. I can't help myself. I'm caught up in the adrenaline, and I have to know what's inside the bag. I bid $15, and it's all mine. But I don't have time to look at it now, because it's on to the next unit.

Over the next five auctions, we don't find any bodies or horse saddles, but I do discover some general rules of the game. For instance, neat units tend to sell for more than messy ones, and mystery seems to trump the quantifiable. One unit filled with chairs, plates and rugs goes for only $55, while another stacked with boxes fetches more than $200. You know what you're getting with the chairs, but boxes, on the other hand… boxes could contain anything. Except for the one designated "Halloween stuff." That one is pretty much guaranteed to contain an old bowl of cold spaghetti labeled "brains."

After all nine units are sold, I settle my tab and return to open my mystery bag. I find two towels, a pair of women's shoes, a prescription bottle with a couple of dimes inside, a Christmas stocking and two 1909 Harvard Classics hardcover books in a plastic pouch. One of the books contains Goethe's The Tragedy of Faust. "I think that unit was rented by one of our homeless customers," says a Castle staffer who's observed my take. I don't know if I'm more surprised that homeless people rent storage units, or that homeless people rent storage units for their hardcover Goethe. Either way, that was easily $15 worth of entertainment. Though, if I'm honest, I probably would've rather had a scratch ticket. ✖✖✖

DOC CURED THE C'S

Coach gets the team in fighting shape.

THE GOAL WAS CLEAR when the Boston Celtics rounded up the new Big Three. And if it wasn't, head coach Doc Rivers, who was his usual forthcoming self, made it so. Win a championship. Now.

A first-year squad, freshly assembled like a Frankenstein monster, going after a title? What about growing pains? What about a learning curve? What about a honeymoon?

How about no.

In addition to his role as coach, Doc has been a student over the past four years. He's gotten to know the region, one that's used to contending for—and winning—championships. And he realized the game has changed around here. Fifty wins and a second-round loss to some decent team isn't going to cut it. The fans and media want more.

"I don't have a problem with that," Rivers says. "I realized what we were getting ourselves into this season. People are very passionate around here. I know the media can be tough sometimes, but the people on the street couldn't have been better. They have been very respectful. They just want a winner, that's all. Do that and they'll be happy. I'm OK with that."

> "People on the street couldn't have been better. They just want a winner, that's all."

Thanks to Danny Ainge pulling a Red Auerbach, this team was built to play in June. Kevin Garnett and Ray Allen are probable Hall of Famers. They're not only great players (admittedly on the back nine of their careers), but they're quality people, too. They embody Celtic Pride.

But Doc deserves his share of the credit for what's happened this season, championship or no championship. He stuck this one out when he didn't have to. After last season's debacle and the unlucky bounces of the lottery's ping-pong balls, he could have taken his millions and run back to Orlando. But he believed in Ainge when a lot of us (including me) didn't. He stayed; and I'm glad he did.

It's nice to see Doc get his due. It's great to see Bill Belichick, maybe the best coach that ever lived, giving him a standing ovation at the Garden. There have been some bumps in the road these playoffs (see: Ray Allen), but Doc's squad has gotten it done, like Bill Russell's and Larry Bird's used to. (Although they didn't always need seven games.)

Doc didn't go with the regular season flow when the playoffs arrived. He made adjustments. He benched Sam Cassell. Eddie House joined him. Thirty-eight-year-old PJ Brown became a pivotal force among the Celtics big men, which may have spurred youngster Kendrick Perkins to be more of a beast.

It's been said that former Celtics coach KC Jones just rolled out the ball and let the original Big Three play. When crunch time came, everyone knew to put it in Larry Bird's hands. Doc has some great players, but no Bird. It means he has to be a little creative, and he has been.

Still, Doc gets questioned, probably because he's so damned nice and approachable. Any Joey Bag o' Donuts with an opinion on the Celtics has been happy to express it to his favorite coach. "I do get questions as to why I'm not playing one player over another, which is funny," Rivers says. "People are used to winning around here. They want to know. I like that. It keeps all of us on our toes."

The funny thing is, X's and O's aren't really what Doc is all about. It's frustrating to watch the final 10 seconds of a game and all the C's get is a deep fall-away from Paul Pierce. But Doc makes up for these deficiencies by inspiring his team to play hard.

One of my favorite traits is his ability to criticize players and get away with it. Doc won't hesitate to give it to Pierce or Allen if they screw up. He isn't afraid to address it at a press conference, either.

The reason he can get away with it is his honesty. He tells the truth, which in the billion-dollar sports industry is about as common as dynasties. But it feels like another one of those may be on the horizon, thanks to Doc.

"I told the guys we were not going to come in thinking we'd need a year to play together," Rivers says. "The goal from the beginning was to be the best. You have to credit the players. They bought into it from day one. They deserve the credit."

As does Doc. Thanks to his help and guidance, the Celtics are relevant again. Maybe he's not the best coach in the league, but you'd be hard-pressed to find a better one for this team. ✖✖✖

THE NBA FINALS, BARRY BONDS, INTERLEAGUE PLAY AND PAPI

OVERHEARD IN THE PHYSICAL THERAPY ROOMS OF THE REHABBING RED SOX

"Mr. Ortiz... Oh, sorry—Papi. Every time you try and do that handshake it sets us back a week... Yes, I do think there are other ways to celebrate after you complete an exercise... I don't know, maybe we could just smile and point at each other?... Fine, we'll point with both hands if that makes you happy."

"Curt, for the last time, wrapping a bloody armband around your shoulder is not going to make this go faster... Stop, all it does is gross the rest of us out... Yes, Mr. Schilling, I want you to do this for John McCain, too. Now please wash yourself, be quiet for a few minutes and I promise that after we're done we can play Dungeons & Dragons."

"[To translator:] Please tell him that I need to apply pressure directly onto his arm muscle ... I know, but dancing and nibbling around the focal point does nothing. It just wears me out. The only way this works is if I have confidence in my ability as a masseuse and go right at it. Tell him he should try it on the mound sometime."

"JD, I know you aren't hurt right now, but listen, they needed a fourth injured player, and if we're being honest, there's like a 75 percent chance you'll end up on the DL by the time this issue hits the streets, so just go with... OK, thanks for understanding. Now what's wrong this time?... A yeast infection?? Not again!"

1 ONE FACT: WE GOT RONDO'D

When we heard Rajon Rondo was getting his own Reebok commercials, we were giddy. After seeing them, however... eh. The concept was perfect, but something about the final product felt off—especially when Rondo pops onto the screen with all the production value and sound quality of Joe Montana in Sports Talk Football.

5 FINALS QUESTIONS

How will KG react?
The last 32 years of Kevin Garnett's life have revolved around this very moment: winning an NBA title. And if the Celtics bring home No. 17, we wonder where the Big Ticket will go with it. Does he lose it like Rod Tidwell at the end of Jerry Maguire? Rush into the locker room and cry it out like MJ? Or maybe God just takes him right there.

Is Sasha Vujacic the least likable opposing player in NBA history?
It's like Vujacic watches Saved by the Bell every morning on TBS, assumes it's depicting present-day SoCal and develops his perception of "cool" in the mold of AC Slater. His persona is beyond frustrating, and his knack for hitting a big shot or two makes him all the more detestable.

Has Perk arrived?
With his play in the Eastern Conference finals, Kendrick Perkins made great strides toward becoming a legitimate NBA center. If he can keep up against Pau Gasol on the championship stage, we might start thinking of Perk as the next Robert Parish (we know, maybe not quite) instead of the next Acie Earl.

Who guards Lamar Odom?
Do they go big (KG) and try to muscle him or go smaller (Pierce) and try to out-quick him? Either way—and short of hiring Robert Parish's old delivery guy to drop a skunky package at Odom's hotel room and then hoping he sleeps through his alarm—the Lakers' wiry point forward will cause matchup problems for the C's.

Does a victory silence Doc's critics?
In the 21 years since the Lakers and Celtics last faced off in the finals, only six coaches have won titles: Pat Riley, Chuck Daly, Phil Jackson, Rudy Tomjanovich, Gregg Popovich and Larry Brown. If that's the Mount Rushmore of modern coaching, Doc Rivers is probably something like the Washington Monument. But if he were to join this insanely distinguished crew could we ever question his worth as coach again? Well, probably, but it wouldn't be as easy.

2 PAPI REPLACEMENTS

If the worst should happen and David Ortiz misses the rest of the year, two of the game's all-time greats will be ripe (or in their cases, overripe) for the picking.

Ken Griffey Jr.: Fifteen years ago we would have traded our new Sega Genesis and the black box in our room that got the Spice Channel to bring Griffey to town, and that offer still stands. Who cares that he's past his prime? Watching Junior in a Sox uniform would be a dream come true.

Barry Bonds: OK, this won't happen. But let's say it did, and then the next week the Patriots signed Ray Carruth. Which move would offend you more—Bonds suiting up for the Sox or a man who conspired to murder his pregnant wife and then hid in the trunk of his mother's car playing for the Pats?

3 DATES TO WATCH

6/13 The Sox get back into the interleague swing with a three-game series in Cincinnati. This one was originally supposed to be played in Boston until the dean of students at Northeastern threatened to pull his advertising at Fenway if Bronson Arroyo is allowed within 10 miles of his campus.

6/19 If necessary, it's Game 7 of the NBA Finals, and even though we'd love for it not to even reach this point, it would be the perfect ending to potentially the most ridiculous eight months of sports a city has ever seen.

6/20 The Cardinals visit Fenway in a rematch of the 2004 World Series. And to commemorate that historic, unforgettable piece of Red Sox history, we've invited ring ceremony star Curtis Leskanic into the office to stand over us while we type this section. It only seems right.

"When I think of prodigies, I think of someone like Mozart. How can anyone compare themselves to Mozart?"

Soroff On ALISA WEILERSTEIN

The master cellist raps on prodigies, playing with her parents and why she's thankful not to haul around a harp.

Born in Boston in 1982, Alisa Weilerstein took up the cello at age 4 and played her first public concert six months later. An alumna of the Young Artist Program at the Cleveland Institute of Music, Weilerstein graduated in 2004 from Columbia University with a B.A. in Russian history. Since then, she has performed as a soloist with the New York Philharmonic, the San Francisco and St. Louis symphonies, and the Orchestra of St. Luke's. With her parents, Donald and Vivian Hornik Weilerstein, she is one-third of the trio-in-residence at the New England Conservatory. She recently made her solo debut in Boston as part of the Celebrity Series. When not on tour, she lives in the North End.

Jonathan Soroff: First off, why do you dislike the term "prodigy"?
Alisa Weilerstein: There are certain connotations connected to it. People think, "She was an abused child, locked up in her room for 10 hours a day, practicing, forced into everything, and she'll burn out at age 35." I led a relatively normal life, and I practiced because I wanted to. The other, perhaps more important thing, is that when I think of prodigies, I think of someone like Mozart. How can anyone compare themselves to Mozart?

Would you admit to being a virtuoso?
That's also a kind of black-and-white term to me. It makes me think, "Well, nice fingering on the instrument but not much of a musician." That might be my own bias. I just don't think of myself in terms like those.

So tell me about your instrument.
It's a Forster, an English cello, made in 1790. It was by Forster Sr.—[the Forsters] were an instrument-making family—and he was famous for violas, cellos and basses. Not too many violins. It's a very beautiful cello, even though it's often considered a poor man's Stradivarius. I'm lucky to have it.

Best compliment you ever received about your playing?
Once I played the Haydn D major concerto in Pittsburgh and someone said, "Wow! You turned me onto Haydn." I love that.

How much of technique or musicianship is innate and how much is learned or can be taught?
I actually like what Isaac Stern said (at least I think it was him): "It's 10 percent talent and 90 percent hard work." So, yes, it's great if you have a natural affinity toward an instrument, but every musician works extremely hard, practicing long hours, and our work is never done. If you don't practice, you're not going to play that well.

You travel more than 99 percent of the population. What do you do with all those frequent flier miles?
I use them for vacation. I do enjoy elite status on certain airlines, which is a great perk.

What do people mistake your cello for when you carry it somewhere in its case?
A machine gun. A tuba. I got an oboe once. One time, someone asked if it was a martini case, which I thought was really bizarre.

Couldn't you have picked a less unwieldy instrument, like a harmonica or a recorder?
My mom was completely supportive of the cello, but she used to joke, "Why'd you choose the cello? It can't fit in the car."

At least it's not a harp.
I know. You see the conservatory students lugging harps or basses onto the subway. I don't know how they do that. I knew a couple. He was a bass player, and she played the harp. I don't know how they traveled anywhere.

Biggest hassle when carrying a cello: elevators, revolving doors, subways?
Incessant questions, which can get kind of annoying at five in the morning when you're jet-lagged. And the fact that I have to buy my cello a full-fare ticket for a seat on a plane.

People have called you the second coming of Yo-Yo Ma. Any thoughts?
That's really, really nice.

I guess that would make you Yo, Ma-ma!
[Laughs.] Whose Mama? I'm only 26. I think I'll hold off on that, thanks.

Hardest part of playing with your parents?
We're family. There's no sugar-coating anything. If we were in a group of people we didn't know, we'd be a bit more circumspect about how we communicated with each other. We're very direct.

So do you consider yourself an athlete?
A musician is an athlete. To make a big sound, you don't just press hard into the strings. You use your weight efficiently. The idea is not to completely relax, but it's a state of active relaxation.

You've played all over the world. Favorite venue?
I'd have to say Jordan Hall. When there are no people in there, it's incredibly swimmy, and though I love the reverberation, it's incredibly hard to hear. Then, when people come in, it's a really warm, rich sound. I love that.

And what's the coolest place?
A hall in Barcelona that wasn't particularly good acoustically but it was so beautiful. The Palacio de Something. It was really ornate and breathtaking.

Favorite conductor?
I really liked playing with [Christoph] Eschenbach [and] Maron Alsop. I had a great time working with Lorin Maazel and Zubin Mehta, and Ludovic Morlot, Jeffrey Kahane....

Dead composer you'd like to meet?
There are a lot of dead composers I'd love to meet. Shostakovich, Brahms, Beethoven, Bach. Actually, most of the dead ones I'd love to meet.

Any guilty pleasures on your iPod: Poison, Cher, the Monkees?
I do love dance music. As far as my iPod, I'm a geek. I love the Beatles, a lot of oldies stuff, Almodóvar sound tracks. Not a lot of Britney Spears.

Best way to deal with coughers, program-rustlers or chatterboxes during a concert?
As a performer, you've got to ignore them. I did a concert in Maine, and there was a little kid who clearly wasn't ready to sit through a concert. He was talking, fell out of his chair, started whining, and I looked at him a couple of times. During the intermission, I said to the presenter, "Did you see that kid?" and he said, "We'll either suggest they leave or seat them somewhere else." You have to rise above it. But as an audience member, feel free to tell them off. I'd appreciate it. ×××

Say Cheese

Scampo's homemade mozzarella stacks up.

The Italians call it "fiore di latte": flower of the milk. Americans used to call it a pizza topping, but now mozzarella has joined the pantheon of desirable cheeses. In her newest restaurant, Scampo, Lydia Shire has enshrined it at a "mozzarella bar," in which her homemade version is sliced, sushi-like, into aesthetic mounds with king crab and green garlic, or peach and pistachio pesto. "It's a crowd-pleaser," says Shire. "If you look at the world of salads, mozzarella with basil and tomatoes is a classic."

Hingham-based cheese importer Linda Luke says that "freshness is the most important quality for flavor in mozzarella. In Italy, you wouldn't even eat it if it was more than a day old." The ideal is sweet and softly chewy, with a springy texture. Cow's milk is the usual basis, but Shire believes that "buffalo mozzarella from Italy has the superior flavor," current cheese controversy notwithstanding.

The chefs at Scampo make their mozzarella by dropping shaved curds into warm, salted water, then shaping the mass with two spoons until it forms a blob. "It can't be worked too much or it becomes hard," says Shire, and Luke likens the process to pulling saltwater taffy. Then the cheese is plopped into ice water until firm. "People are loving it," says Shire. "It's pretty. It tastes good. It's simple."

Herb

Will Gilson grows into a formidable chef.

By Megan Lisagor
Photographs by Mike Casey

Burrata with speck, basil and rhubarb

Sorry, dad," Will Gilson laughs before stealing another bundle for his heaping stash. What's a little sweet basil between father and son? It feels warmer than 66 degrees on this spring afternoon at the Herb Lyceum, the family farm in Groton where Gilson grew up. Blue skies cap the four-acre property like the lid on a simmering pot, as he forages for dinner among the awakening blooms. He looks at home, grinning and kneeling in the grass.

Except for the designer shirt, jeans and boots. And the spotless hands. In my experience, you can tell a Gilson by the dirt beneath his nails. But this one, this 25-year-old chef, has morphed into "a city boy," as his mom, Jodie, teases earlier in the day, trays of violets balanced on slender shoulders. If Gilson's not at his Cambridge gastropub Garden at the Cellar or his noisy Union Square loft, he's probably drinking a gin and tonic at Eastern Standard's busy bar.

Of course, appearances only tell half the story. Anyway, Gilson still drives a truck and keeps a short brown beard that matches his ruffled hair. He's part country, part city, an enviable state at a time when eating locally has entered the foodie consciousness. While his peers make a show of going organic, Gilson just does his thing. It's second nature to him, all this sustainable stuff.

"I like cooking vegetables perfectly," he explains, clipping buds. Sounds simple enough, but his particular way with produce has earned the Garden accolades in area publications and a neighborhood following. It's no ordinary pub, with bar snacks that include warmed olives and regular deliveries from dad David's harvest. Then again, it was no ordinary beginning to what looks like a long culinary career.

While his peers make a show of going organic, Gilson just does his thing. It's second nature to him, all this sustainable stuff.

Will and David Gilson

Make It Myself

"If I was home and hungry, it was fend for yourself," Gilson says of his childhood, launching into the story although I've only just met him. He seems as open as the road, as we drive down Route 2 past leafy trees repeating like a roll of wallpaper, to meet the people and the land he loves. There are, it appears, going to be no secret ingredients in the recipe that constitutes his life.

Gilson's parents got into herbs when he was 5, and like any small business, it required lots of attention. Without any siblings to share kitchen duty, he owned the space. Before long, he understood proportions— ⅓ wet, ⅓ dry, ⅓ sweet—and had a catchphrase: "Make it myself!" Jodie recalls. "He'd open up the cabinets and take out anything that seemed interesting to him."

School was literally in the backyard, a building away, but much of his learning happened on the farm with his educator-parents and on vacations. While other kids visited Mickey and Minnie in Orlando, the Gilsons traveled around the country, attending conferences with the International Herb Association.

The family also did the farmers' market circuit, where David met Charles Draghi, then chef at Marcuccio's in the North End. This was a man who spent a couple grand a week on produce. David persuaded Draghi to take Gilson on as an apprentice. He was 15. "I was nervous as all hell," he says. But the restaurant world fit. "It was like having a lens out of focus and, all of a sudden, tightening it."

Time spent with Gilson means time in tune with my senses. He has me rubbing, sniffing, biting—treating the herbs like a glass of wine. No pretentiousness here, just country charm.

Draghi was surprised the kid even showed up but was glad for the free labor. He had Gilson doing prep, then put him on the line and later on the floor. "We threw him right into the thick of it, and he did well," says Draghi, now a chef/restaurant consultant. "He had that native ability to understand flavor pairings," like turkey and sage.

Gilson had a chance to expand his palate a year later on his first trip to Italy with his grandparents. Venice was a highlight, but the memory is bittersweet. When he returned to Groton, his mom and dad had split. They divided the herb business, and Jodie moved to a family farm a mile-and-a-half away. He stayed on the homestead with David and continued with Draghi in the city.

You Just Need to Try That

We exit Route 2 in Acton and pull into the parking lot of Idylwilde Farms, just as Gilson remembers the grocery story is closed on Tuesdays. He swings back onto the highway and, a winding road or so later, points out two silos that mark the entrance to his mom's place in Ayer. We leave the truck for a greenhouse, commenting on the lucky weather as a soft breeze wafts through my blouse.

Gilson steps over a cat, perma-smile growing, ducking between rows of vegetation. He spots his mom and emits a soft whistle. This is a mother-son thing; I still can't see her. Suddenly, Jodie appears, embracing her baby. Gilson engulfs her petite frame, his chocolate mop a head above her blonde curls.

They start talking shop. It turns out people prefer potted plants to packs of seeds. Then Gilson gets to grazing, looking for loot like Mario Batali in a salumeria. He asks for scissors, and Jodie pulls a collapsible pair from her jeans. From then on, the conversation is punctuated with phrases like "You just need to try that!"

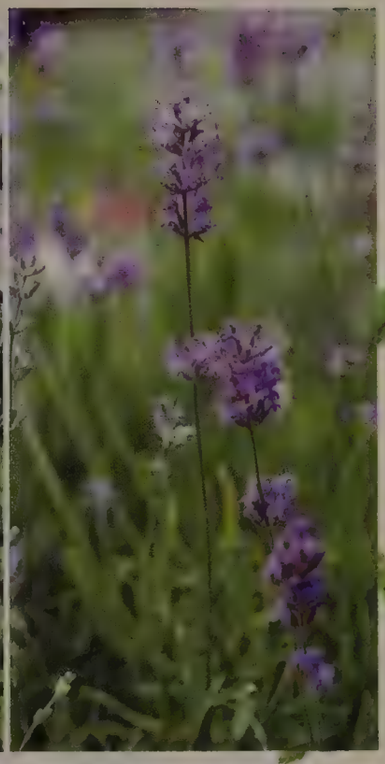
I quickly discover that time with Gilson means time in tune with my senses. He has me rubbing, sniffing, biting—treating the herbs like a glass of wine. No pretentiousness here, just country charm. The pea shoots, I learn, are woodsy, the lovage like celery and good in a Bloody Mary. Hugged by Jodie and gifted with rosemary, which I happen to know is for remembrance, we set off.

Enough Beer to Say OK

At the homestead, David renovated a 19th-century carriage house, transforming it into a school and eventually a dining hall christened the Herb Lyceum. He didn't look far for a chef. Gilson served the first of many meals in 1999, plucking plants for a simple spread that included an egg soup of Draghi's devise and roast chicken.

Not everyone got the garden-to-table concept. Gilson recalls chucking pans into the yard when customers made impossible demands. Still, he stuck with the project through college at Johnson & Wales University in Providence, taking breaks to intern at

Jodie Gilson



London's Lanesborough Hotel under Paul Gayler, known for his vegetarian dishes, and to complete a whirlwind winery tour.

After graduating in 2005 with degrees in food-service management and culinary arts, he went to work for local celebrity chef Ana Sortun. For two years, he toiled on the line at Sortun's Oleana and commuted to Groton to run the now–Friday-and-Saturday dinners at the lyceum, which had found their footing. "I was at a crossroads as to where I wanted to go," he says. "I'd been cooking since I was 16. I was 23."

He started hanging out at the Cellar, a watering hole in Central Square. He got to know the regulars. He got to know the proprietress, Marilyn Carter. He got himself the restaurant upstairs. It was almost that easy. She asked, and he had enough beer in him to say OK. They forged a partnership—Marilyn would continue to handle the bar and alcohol, he'd oversee the food. It was an unconventional move for a rising star, to strike out on his own. Of course, he'd had early mentors.

It's Restaurant Development

"When you meet my dad, you'll see," Gilson says, sounding like a disciple. I first meet the family cat and dog in the farmhouse. It's a short stroll to the lyceum, two adjoining rooms done in country-elegant decor. We find David there.

He had big plans—naming it the Garden signaled this wasn't a typical pub—but started small in September, serving items like tater tots and fries to the Cellar crowd.

And I quickly see. Warmth emanates from him, embodied by his tanned skin. In sweatshirt and shorts, David takes me on a tour of the grounds, stopping to rub, sniff and bite, just like his son. He offers tips: "A garden should have invitations," "You have to comply with Mother Nature," and so on. It's a tutorial on bounty and boy.

"It's like child development," he says of Gilson tackling the Garden. "It's restaurant development. You can't just go right to the top." We pause at the ladder's first rung, in the kitchen where Gilson began. David pours juice for me; Gilson similarly plies me with water throughout the day without my having to ask.

They talk about how the place has changed. The appliances have been updated and another guy, Gregg Whiting, is manning the stoves. It's still Gilson's turf, though, and he plops down a stack of cookbooks for Whiting to check out. The three of us head outside to—what else?—fill another bowl with herbs headed for Cambridge.

Before hitting the road, Gilson and I return to the dining hall, which guests crowd for seasonal menus that might include lavender-infused custard with lemon verbena tuile crisp. "It's also tough for me to come back here," he says wistfully, surveying the lyceum. "So many years of trying and it not catching on." Once it caught, he moved on.

Where His Heart Is

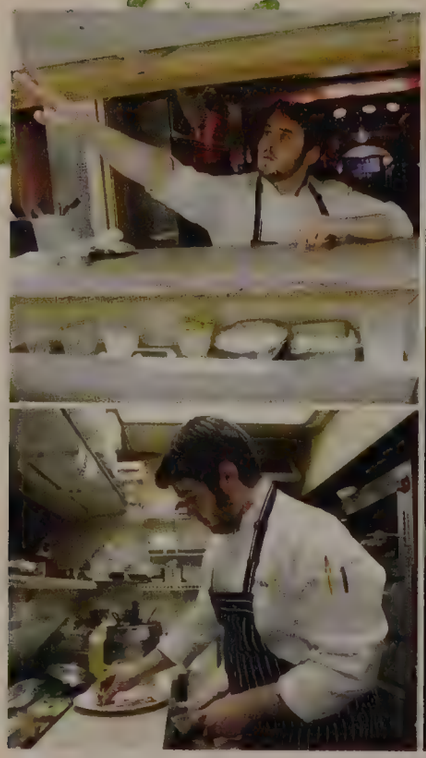
The Garden faced its own uphill battle. The restaurant had been closed for three years, during which time Carter let Cellar customers bring in cheap pizza from a nearby joint. Gilson had to break them of the habit. He spent the summer of 2006 planning, pulling on meager resources: $1,200 from a catering gig and a $400 gift certificate to Crate & Barrel from his colleagues at Oleana.

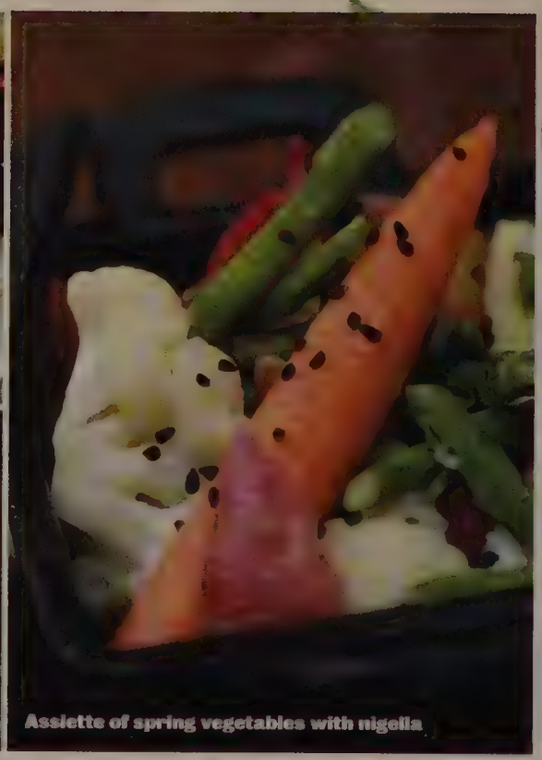
He had big plans—naming it the Garden signaled this wasn't a typical pub—but started small in September, serving items like tater tots and fries to the Cellar crowd. Granted, his tots were homemade, his fries dressed in rosemary and truffles. Still, it was a one-man operation.

Two months later, he opened the upstairs space with a staff of two, including the nephew of a dishwasher at Oleana. The Garden is essentially a narrow room with 22 seats and a 14-stool bar down one side. Herb prints and beer ads decorate the brick walls, potted sage the copper tables. Simple surroundings for simple food.

The regulars showed up—many for the tomato soup with grilled cheese and, especially, the burgers. It's the most popular item to this day (to his chagrin) and gets the Gilson touch with grass-fed beef and Vermont cheddar. "It's a reality check," he admits. "There's only so much you can do."

But as buzz has built, he's done more: steamed littlenecks with Greek yogurt, bacon and green garlic; spring-dug parsnip soup with seared scallop, truffles and thyme;





Assiette of spring vegetables with nigella

Maine lobster with sweet-and-sour oranges and spiced carrot

pea greens salad with lobster, avocado puree and oranges; and mushroom flatbread with ricotta, bacon and asparagus. His roots really shine in the sides: roasted beets with chives, pureed local parsnips and roasted sweet-garlic spinach, among others.

It's a farmers' market menu to make the sustainable food movement swoon, though Gilson's the first to admit that staying regional isn't always possible. "Restaurants are a 12-month-a-year business," he explains. "The growing season is at best six months." The winter is heavy on local meat and cheese, less so on produce.

"I almost envy him," says friend Jamie Bissonnette, executive chef at KO Prime. "He just knows everyone." His relationships with popular purveyors like Eva's Garden go back to his childhood. "He's not using local to say he's using local," Bissonnette adds. "That's where his heart is."

Gonna Start a Revolution

On our way out of town, we make one final stop at a market in Littleton. While I exclaim over a huge wheel of cheddar—enough to feed grilled cheese to an entire school cafeteria—Gilson grabs a carton of farm eggs. Next a Chianti salami catches his eye (yeah, that's coming with us) and a pint of fresh strawberries, which we pop in our mouths.

Back in the city, he parks on Mass. Ave., across the street from the Garden, and carries his treasures inside. It's 4 o'clock, and he plunks down at a two-top to do payroll with a spare calculator and a laptop. There's no space for an office in the pub. Another quirk, the Garden doesn't have a landline, so he uses his Blackberry to call in the financial info, just one of the systems and schedules he has to worry about in his role as boss.

Gilson's the first to admit that staying regional isn't always possible. "Restaurants are a 12-month-a-year business," he explains. "The growing season is at best six months." The winter is heavy on local meat and cheese.

That taken care of, Gilson claps his hands, asking, "What are we gonna make today?" before changing into his chef whites and clogs. He leaves to survey the ingredients in the tiny, three-butt kitchen, which was recently reconfigured, writing recipes on a guest check. Picking among pots (for growing, not cooking), he builds a new dish.

"It's weird. Sometimes I'll bring my mom and dad back together on the plate," Gilson observes. He's single himself, though not for lack of interested women, including a customer who asked him out on Valentine's Day. But food consumes him. After work, he often makes the rounds with industry friends to favorite spots like Green Street.

Gilson gathers the staff to go over the night's specials, Spanish music playing on the radio. The daily small plate pairs handmade burrata with basil from each parent, slices of the sausage, extra-virgin olive oil and a vinaigrette made from the strawberries. The appetizer features one of the eggs fried over a salad of warm asparagus. This comes with pea flowers, wild sorrel, a warm lemon vinaigrette and marjoram, which he describes as "similar to oregano, but much sweeter, and [it] goes awesome with eggs."

Next he talks about the new shed out back, equipped with solar paneling, and the end of importing items like cheese from France. The cost of oil is too expensive, he says. "And no one's allowed to drive here!" one staffer teases. "You have to show your Charlie Card." Another adds, "We're gonna start a revolution."

It's not entirely a joke. Gilson says he wants to change the way locals eat. While currently focused on the Garden, he'd like to open his own place in Cambridge and, eventually, another in the countryside. He envisions the two supporting each other, a plan that doesn't sound far-fetched to his peers. "He's the kind of person who's going to be not just a great chef but also a great restaurateur," Bissonnette predicts.

Gilson already has groupies, exhibited by the regulars grabbing seats at the bar shortly after the Garden opens. Jazz now swimming from the speakers, he walks out to greet them. It's a mixed crowd—students, professor types, young professionals, in khakis, fleece, overpriced denim. I share dinner with a friend, exhausted from our long day, as Gilson just starts to rev up. Ah, to be 25.

The following morning, I realize my rosemary didn't make it home. I text Gilson, having entertained visions of developing my nascent green thumb by caring for the pot on my deck in the Back Bay. He responds, "The plant will be there. And, trust me, there's always more." For him, more plants, more projects, more to come. ✖✖✖

It's All Local

The dynamic behind sustainable cooking

By Nick Altschuller
Photographs by Darren Stahlman

THE WIND BLOWS through the cow pasture at Battle Road Farm's Big Ox Farm in Concord. Peter Merrill stands by the fence in a tattered yellow sweatshirt, his face ruddy and unshaven—a farmer look. Big Jim sits under an apple tree, all 2,500 pounds of him, head like an anvil, only heavier.

Merrill calls the cattle. The shaggy, 300-pound Scottish Highlands blink a bored response. They know it's not feeding time. Merrill eyes them back and switches mind-sets. "You don't wanna have a giant steakhouse cut." He makes a small circle with his thumbs and index fingers. "You want a nice cut on the plate, so you have the five-, 10-, 20-ouncers." The cows bow their heads and go back to grazing.

Later, as affectionate pigs nestle his legs, Merrill, 29, recounts what got him here. Three years ago, he was a pastry chef at Sel de la Terre, ready to get out of the kitchen and spend nights with the family. He apprenticed at the Farm School in Athol and now manages their 27 acres inside Minute Man National Park.

From 6:30 am to 6:30 pm, Merrill works outside, mostly alone. He had a dog, but it ran away. There are songs about this kind of thing. He grows small fields of vegetables. Protects his chickens from wolves and foxes. In the barn, newborn lambs, just eight hours old, feed from their mother. Merrill watches from the pen door. "They're all boys, so they'll all be meat, which isn't such a bad thing."

Eating locally is a hurricane's-eye idea—seemingly simple, but surrounded by a mass of outside forces. It attaches something as fundamental as farming to modern concepts like food miles and corporate piggeries. As gas prices and environmental concerns rise, the basic act of buying produce grown by your neighbor has become fashionable.

"It's a trend, but it's here to stay," says Mitchell Davis, vice president of the James Beard Foundation. "It wasn't always that tomatoes didn't taste good or there's only one kind of apple. That happened with commercialized food, and this is partly a reaction to that."

Davis tracks the movement's start to the work of two chefs in the late '70s. Out west, there was Alice Waters, originator of locally infused "California cuisine." Back east, Frenchman Jean-Louis Palladin shook up Washington, D.C. The youngest chef to win two Michelin stars at that time, Palladin was shocked by the lack of goods stateside. So he learned about the native ingredients and worked with farmers to grow what was needed.

Today, Massachusetts is a leader in providing consumers with fresh produce without help from a middleman. The state ranks first nationwide in direct sales per farm, with the average farm selling $24,900 worth of goods at markets and stands, according to the New England Agricultural Statistics 2004 and U.S. Census of Agriculture 2002 (the latest figures available). In all, local farms made $31 million in direct sales, good for 40 percent of New England's total, the data show.

"It's a trend, but it's here to stay," says Mitchell Davis, vice president of the James Beard Foundation. "It wasn't always that tomatoes didn't taste good or there's only one kind of apple. That happened with commercialized food, and this is partly a reaction to that."

Still, they face major economic hurdles, with 93 percent of them classified as "small," according to the USDA. "Farms are under huge amounts of pressure to sell their land for developments, and they're being taxed at a really high rate," says Sarah Kelley, executive director of the nonprofit Southeastern Massachusetts Agricultural Partnership (SEMAP). Massachusetts ranks third in farmland value at $9,234 per acre, but owners can be taxed more than 10 times that amount, if the property isn't specifically classified by the state as farmland. "That reflects the amount of desire for the land for uses other than farming," Kelley explains. "Most farms are being taxed at a lower rate, but not all." Beaten by the numbers, Massachusetts has lost hundreds of farms and, between 1997 and 2002, nearly a fifth of its total farmland. That loss translates to less variety and more sprawl.

Buying direct helps the remaining farms stay afloat—an economic consideration that also ties into the politics of food. "If we don't eat seasonally, we'll expect raspberries in January, and they won't taste very good, and we'll be increasing our carbon footprint because they have to be shipped from far away," says Rosemary Melli, governor of Slow Food Northeast, an organization that teaches people about the benefits of sustainable dining.

Massachusetts has lost hundreds of farms and, between 1997 and 2002, nearly a fifth of its total farmland.

Restaurants feel the impact as well. "The chefs are delighted with the movement because food tastes so much better when it's fresh and local and seasonal," Melli says. "It gives them a chance to be more creative. In the winter, for instance, they'll say, 'How can I make these root vegetables that I'm left with more exciting?'"

Dante de Magistris agrees. "It's a better, more true product,' says de Magistris, chef of Dante restaurant in Cambridge. "I cook

Foraged fiddleheads make a meal with homemade sausage and scallops at T.W. Food in Cambridge.

Italian food, and Italian food is food that is local and made from whatever is available. When fava beans are in season, you're going to see them all over the menu."

At its root, that's the local food approach. The execution, however, isn't so simple. There are corporate farms to avoid, distributors to bypass and bizarre environmental statistics quantifying fuel expenditure by how many trips a tractor-trailer could take to space. To compound the confusion, "Being local doesn't always mean it's green," explains Todd English, the brains behind Olives, Figs and countless other restaurants nationwide. "You gotta know who your sources are."

More and more local chefs have found ways to overcome these obstacles, with two in Cambridge at the forefront. Not alone in their efforts, they offer good examples of carrying on the ideal while addressing the past decade's additions and demands.

Taste is a driving force for Tony Maws. "Even if there wasn't a political agenda, if you taste a tomato in August versus a tomato you bought in January, I don't care how or where it was grown, it's not even a comparison," says Maws, the 38-year-old chef at Craigie Street Bistrot.

But politics does play a role. "There's a political and philosophical motive, which is strong in me. I was raised in a certain way," he says, leaning back in a dining room chair. The scruffy Newton native grew up in an eco-conscious household. "I need to do things in a way I can be proud of, top-down, so the type of product I buy is absolutely instrumental to that. Otherwise I'd be a hypocrite."

Fears of hypocrisy are gusts of wind on the tightrope walk of serving local food. Certainly it's fresher and helps producers stay in business, although it's impossible to achieve all the time. "When things travel 50 miles or 20 miles or five miles, they're going to taste differently than when they're picked and packed to travel thousands of miles. I'd have that perspective even if I didn't have a political side," says Maws. "That's not to say I don't get things from California. I do, absolutely. I'm in New England; I have four seasons. The thing I like to stress about local or seasonal or both, is that I try to make the best choices I can when I have the choice to make."

He keeps three factors in mind: what's in stock, what needs to be used and what's coming in fresh. With details ever-changing, the menu morphs daily—local food's greatest perk and chefly challenge. From his tiny walk-in fridge, hardly big enough for a half-step, Maws grabs herbs from Eva's Garden in Dartmouth and rhubarb from Verrill Farm in Concord. He flaunts a bin of hand-foraged morels, as excited as a kid showing off his coin collection.

"Even if there wasn't a political agenda, if you taste a tomato in August versus a tomato you bought in January, I don't care how or where it was grown, it's not even a comparison," says Tony Maws, chef at Craigie Street Bistrot.

Out in the dining room, his employees gather for their morning meeting. "We've got a busy night tonight," Maws leads off as an assistant walks in carrying fresh Mexican chocolate from Somerville. He announces tentative plans to race to Belmont to visit a local grower. "She might have some baby turnips. We'll see. She was harvesting yesterday." On to stock: "Is there any funky stuff kicking around that we need to use?" "There's that veal brain," one chef offers. Lacking enough of the key ingredient, a crayfish plate becomes a crayfish soup. A pea green shortage changes the accompaniment to bok choy. Sweetbreads later replace the crayfish. The factors are juggled. Local parts are interchanged. With choices to make, the best decisions are made.

Trust is a decisive factor for chef Tim Wiechmann, 34. "It's not about jumping on some trend; it's about building relationships with people." Sitting in T.W. Food's diminutive waiting area, a clean-shaven Wiechmann explains: "The minute you have people you can't talk to at the source, you have lies and politics, and you can't discern whether it's quality or not. My goal is to serve the highest-quality thing that I can. Every chef should probably answer that the same way."

He drives out to Grateful Farms in Franklin to see the still-growing eggplant. He talks with Merrill about how he raises cattle and buys entire carcasses. Since T.W.'s core is local sources, inspecting and trusting the quality is essential to his methodology. "I call it purity of food. It's the purest food, and cutting out the distribution is great because you're not trusting anyone else. And all of a sudden it's eco-friendly. All of a sudden, just by doing what I do, I've cut out a lot of the negative aspects of larger society."

Downstairs in the prep kitchen, Wiechmann lives "true seasonality," free from Peruvian asparagus and tomatoes in January. What's left of a cow lies in a few handbag-sized sections on a steel table. Locally grown greens from sorrel to shiso sit in the walk-in. Wiechmann doesn't know what dishes he'll create until these ingredients are in hand. Like sculpture, it takes technique, adaptability and belief in the source material. "We start with this beef, and now fiddleheads and ramps are in season, so we have a beef with sorrel sauce with sautéed ramps and fiddleheads. That's it."

Back in the barn, Merrill knows that the relationships he has are essential to his small-farm sustainability. "A big farm I could see going with a distributor because you don't have to deliver. You don't have to make relationships if you have 12 acres of pumpkins and somebody's going to come pick it up." Sitting by the small basin where he cleanses his vegetables, Merrill continues, "I'm smaller. Maybe I'm going to get half the money if I don't deliver. It makes more sense for me to develop a relationship."

On the chef end, this dynamic offers control. For Merrill, it provides a directive. He knows what varietals to grow, how many pigs to raise, with the assurance that all will be sold. As a basic formula, "If you have something that you made, and I want that, you and I are going to be friends," says Wiechmann, who gives his farmers keys to the restaurant. With his hands still dirty from the petting, Merrill explains: "It's not like I'm raising 1,000 pigs. I'm raising 12, and I do get attached to them, and I want to make sure that at the end of the cycle, they get the best preparation possible."

In a sustainable kitchen, vegetables still have mud on them. Meat is carved from the carcass, not exhumed from a Cryovac bag. And when you eat local, be you environmentalist or economist, you're content at having contributed to something beyond your belly. But behind the swinging door and out on the land, it's appreciation between chef and farmer that fuels the movement. "I eat at the places where my food goes. I'm proud that it's there," Merrill declares. "It creates a better product once that plate hits the table. The guys preparing it know me. They know the animal, and they take a lot more pride in it." ✖✖✖

Fruity Call

BERRY MY HEART

Summer means Bostonians can finally ditch antiseptic aisles for outdoor markets, cellophane for the taste of fresh fruit. On June 21 and 22, Lexington's Wilson Farms takes you down to strawberry fields, where everything is real and calories don't matter. In addition to the extravagantly delicious produce that's kept Wilson on the map for 124 years, there'll be chocolate-dipped berries, cobblers and other tasty treats. In 2007, the farm broke a Guinness world record with its oversized shortcake. This year's contender will take another stab at gigantism, attempting to win by weight of overwhelming fruitiness. Cake will be fathered, and whipped cream will be dolloped. It's going to get messy. All of the sweet festival activities are free of charge.

Strawberry Fest 2008 runs June 21 and 22, 10am–5pm at Wilson Farms, 10 Pleasant St., Lexington, (781-862-3900), wilsonfarm.com

Baby Mama ★★ ½ Fans of Tina Fey's self-deprecating pratfalls on her terrific sitcom 30 Rock will be surprised at just how stiff and unconvincing she is on the big screen playing straight woman to Amy Poehler's trashy surrogate in this uneven farce from former SNL writer Michael McCullers. No points for guessing that Fey's bland career woman learns to loosen up thanks to Poehler's pee-in-the-sink rambunctiousness, but does the odious legacy of Adam Sandler dictate that every modern comedy starring SNL cast members must end with a schmaltzy courtroom confrontation? Burlington native Poehler gives her all to an erratically written character, but she's more successful in the earlier comedic scenes than the later sappy stuff. Indifferently photographed and poorly staged, the movie remains watchable thanks largely to an overqualified roster of supporting players, especially Sigourney Weaver's condescending executive and a marvelous turn from Steve Martin that's easily the funniest thing he's done in years. (At Boston Common and in the suburbs.)

The Chronicles of Narnia: Prince Caspian ★ What a violent and ugly militaristic slog this is! Sucking all the wonder out of CS Lewis' novel, director Andrew Adamson blew $100 million on special effects without mustering a single memorable image. Even the sunlight is pale and wan as those bratty, fairly indistinguishable Pevensie children return to their formerly enchanted fairyland to find that 1,300 years have passed and everybody's trapped in some sort of downcast Bored of the Rings with a bit of Hamlet in there, too. Ben Barnes makes Orlando Bloom seem captivating as the tedious title character who seeks vengeance and leads chintzy elfin creatures against some disturbing, racially coded baddies. There's no surprise, delight or anything resembling levity here, just one grim battle after another rendered in Adamson's hacky medium shots and close-ups. The light-skinned true-believers slaughter legions of swarthy, bearded heathens, all in preparation for the second coming of a lion (Jesus, as voiced by Liam Neeson) who doles out some even meaner divine retribution. Onward, Christian soldiers. Next stop: the Crusades, or Iran. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Forgetting Sarah Marshall ★★★ This filthy, winning comedy is the latest from producer Judd Apatow's seemingly inexhaustible well of schlubby guys, impossibly hot women and embarrassing sexual shenanigans. Jason Segel, who also penned the screenplay, stars as a heartbroken lummox running away to Hawaii in the wake of a bad breakup—only to find himself at the same resort as his ex (and her new beau, naturally.) It's a nifty hook, and Segel gets away with some astoundingly dirty jokes by approaching every scene with an almost childlike enthusiasm. His specialty consists of a snark-free delivery that's all the more hilarious for its ardor. Capably if unexceptionally directed by Nicholas Stoller, Forgetting Sarah Marshall meanders a bit before building to a climax that offers more smiles than belly laughs. But that spirit of affection is what lingers when the lights come up. It's actually a pleasure spending time with these people, which is a rare feeling at the movies these days. (At Boston Common and in the suburbs.)

Indiana Jones And the Kingdom of the Crystal Skull ★★★ I'm still not sure there's any reason for this film to exist, but the extremely belated return of Dr. Henry Jones Jr. turns out to be a perfectly serviceable nostalgia piece. Keeping the jokey, family-comedy vibe of 1989's The Last Crusade, only with sharper filmmaking and a softer script, this romp through Atomic Age signifiers boasts some striking, at times purposefully cheesy visuals, along with Steven Spielberg's peerless mastery of kinetic energy. It's a treat to watch Harrison Ford deliver an honest-to-God performance again, and he perks up considerably during the too-few scenes when he resumes his screwball bickering with Karen Allen's Marion Ravenwood. The stakes are low but the spirits high, and Spielberg keeps everything bouncing along so jauntily, it's hard to even be bothered that the mystical alien gobbledygook plot doesn't make any sense. Crystal Skull is far more concerned with tickling viewers' memories of the hat, the whip and that rousing John Williams trumpet fanfare. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Iron Man ★★★ "I'm not really the hero type," quips Robert Downey Jr. with a glint in his eye, helpfully summing up this picture's off-kilter appeal in a nifty nutshell. The movie itself is well-assembled, fairly standard stuff, and there's

A HOT MESS

Sandler's subconscious is the star in Zohan.

You Don't Mess With the Zohan
Starring Adam Sandler, John Turturro, Emmanuelle Chiriqui, Lainie Kazan, Rob Schneider and Dave Matthews. Written by Sandler, Judd Apatow and Robert Smigel. Directed by Dennis Dugan. At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.

ADMIT IT. You've all been dying to hear Adam Sandler's take on Israeli-Palestinian relations, haven't you?

Nobody makes a movie as restless, freaky and all over the map as You Don't Mess With the Zohan unless they have a hell of a lot on their mind. The film is a bloody mess, but it'll also never be confused with the sort of phoned-in star vehicle somebody of Sandler's stature could easily coast his way through. To paraphrase the late Spalding Gray, his subconscious is so close to the surface you can see its periscope.

Then again, that shouldn't come as much of a surprise. The box office's most reliable man-child has grown more interesting as he's settled into middle age. Always the consummate businessman, Sandler has managed to build a dependable brand with his Happy Madison Productions.

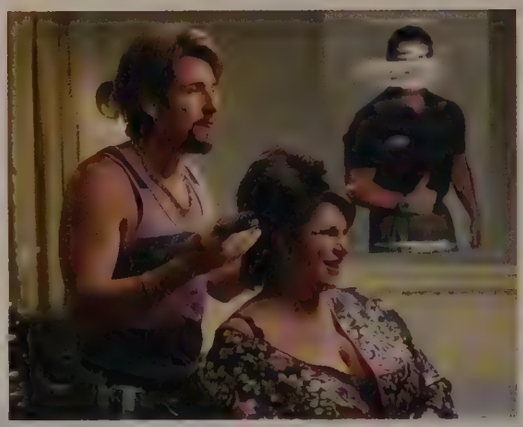
Distinguished by their slapdash filmmaking, gratuitous cameos by unemployed SNL veterans and a sentimental streak a mile long, these pictures have recently begun to shimmer with something new—inarticulate lunges at artistic ambition.

To clarify, we're not discussing Sandler's sadly neglected work outside his self-generated projects. (I take a backseat to no man in my adoration for Paul Thomas Anderson's glorious Punch-Drunk Love, and Sandler's fine performances highlighted the otherwise iffy Reign Over Me and James Brooks' woebegone Spanglish.)

I'm referring to the strangely affecting melancholy of 50 First Dates, or the humorless mortality-wallow that was the second half of Click. Even last year's atrocious I Now Pronounce You Chuck & Larry capped two hours of snickering homophobia with a tear-jerking plea for tolerance. Sandler's clearly wrestling with his influence these days.

Lurching between inspiration and inanity, Zohan presents him as a supernaturally skilled Mossad agent bored by the endless cycle of Middle Eastern strife. He fights with an unfunny, double-jointed dexterity. He's so slick he makes balloon animals out of the rocks hurled at him by Palestinian children, and he has a knack for wrapping his opponents into helpless pretzel shapes. Tired of capturing and recapturing his arch-nemesis, "the Phantom" (played with the usual reckless abandon by John Turturro), Zohan fakes his own death and heads for America.



Tracy Bennett

It's a whole new world over here, one full of gaudy electronics stores and easy jabs at tacky Middle Eastern stereotypes. But what Zohan really wants is to become a professional hairstylist, even if such a disreputable dream must force him to swallow his pride and get a job on "the Palestinian side of the street." He finds his calling, and also his true love, in salon owner Dalia (the radiant Emmanuelle Chirqui)—a romantic situation complicated not just by centuries of ethnic strife, but also by Zohan's cheerful penchant for sexually servicing his elderly female customers. (There's even a shot of Sandler doing it doggy-style with My Big Fat Greek Wedding costar Lainie Kazan. Adjust your concession stand purchases accordingly.)

Briefly picking up plotlines only to drop them just as quickly, the leisurely paced, overlong You Don't Mess With the Zohan also finds time for an unamusing arena hackey-sack competition that's really just a smokescreen for evil land developers. Hoping to level the block to build a mall, they hire a redneck terrorist and die-hard Mel Gibson fan (Dave Matthews, tongue jammed in cheek) to stage phony bombings and transform the neighborhood into a Manhattan version of the Gaza Strip.

Sandler wrote the script with TV Funhouse genius Robert Smigel and the ubiquitous Judd Apatow, who seems required to have his name on every third comedy released these days. But for all the non sequiturs and borderline racist gags, You Don't Mess With the Zohan eventually comes around to painting a lovely world where everybody can get along and eat hummus together, if they only wise up, unite against their corporate landlords and learn how to communicate. Says an Israeli character finally understanding an Arab cabdriver's woes, "Everyone here hates us because they think we're you."

There are almost enough shockingly insightful throwaways like that to make you ignore all the gross-out sex, penis jokes and Dennis Dugan's abysmal, inattentive direction. But you'll leave mulling the plight of Sandler's obviously autobiographical Zohan. He's bored with the old game and aching to offer something more, be it feathered hairstyles or meatier projects. ✖✖✖ not a plot point that won't feel familiar if you've sat through any of the billion or so comic book adaptations released in the past 10 years. Yet, somehow, Downey's snarky presence in the lead makes it seem like a wonderful act of subversion. According to formula, Iron Man winds up playing it safe and hitting all the expected, crowd-pleasing beats, but the movie works best if you consider it as an outsized chronicle of its star's own recent redemption—one of those weird pop culture artifacts in which actors comment upon themselves and their careers. Like Lindsay Lohan's I Know Who Killed Me, except not horrible. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Reprise ★★★★ This blast of pure exhilaration from new director Joachim Trier follows two friends and competing novelists through their rocky, post-collegiate tribulations. Troubled genius Phillip (Anders Danielsen Lie) becomes an instant cult hero with his first novel, while the more level-headed Erik (Espen Klouman Hoiner) has a tougher time finding his voice. There's a swaggering, joyful exuberance as our gang of rough and tumble Oslo intellectuals gorge on great books, punk rock and beautiful women. But what's loveliest about Reprise (besides the novelty of a movie daring to equate knowledge with excitement) is Trier's bittersweet view of the characters' emerging adulthood, which observes how youthful ardor mellows into something slightly saner, but no less nourishing. A marvelous coming-of-age film, Reprise is like Trainspotting, except with literature instead of heroin. (At Kendall Square.)

Roman de Gare ★★ ½ In what turns out to be half of a nifty little thriller (with the other half being a pseudo-intellectual wank), veteran director Claude Lelouch has fun toying with audience expectations and preconceptions before the game finally gets away from him. The invaluable Dominique Pinon gets a too-rare leading role as a man of mystery who rescues flighty, abandoned Huguette (Audrey Dana) from a highway rest stop. Is Pinon that famous serial killer who just broke out of prison? Or is he just a mousy bookworm who walked out on his wife? Lelouch teases our prejudices, wringing an hour or so of great suspense from simple interactions. But then the film goes kerflooey by dragging in Fanny Ardant as a murderous novelist and piling unnecessary meta-commentaries on top of some none-too-deep profundities. Pinon and Dana's tentative, dangerous courtship is far more fascinating than the ensuing, self-impressed twaddle. In French with English subtitles. (At Waltham Embassy.)

Sex and the City ★ ½ A telling early shot finds Sarah Jessica Parker and friends with their noses smushed up against the display case of a $50,000 diamond ring, thus setting the tone for the following 135 minutes of covetous consumption. With five costume changes, even the opening credits are a parade of product placements. Calling the film light on plot would be generous. Carrie and Miranda are treated shabbily by longtime loves, so they spend an entire calendar year ignoring apologies and wallowing in self-pity while Charlotte and Samantha drop by for drinks. Meanwhile, there are fashions, labels and lavish living spaces. Luxury porn and brand-name loyalty haven't been this fetishized since American Psycho. Inexplicably longer than Letters From Iwo Jima, Sex and the City leaves you feeling sorry for these shallow women and their empty avaricious lives. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Shine a Light ★★★ What was once rebellious eventually becomes part of the establishment. This isn't a slight, just a simple fact of life, and it's one that Martin Scorsese seems to have grown comfortable with, judging from his exuberant, if inessential, Rolling Stones concert documentary. Having enlisted an army of the world's most formidable cinematographers, including Children of Men's Emmanuel Lubeszki, There Will Be Blood's Robert Elswit and even Gimme Shelter's Albert Maysles, Scorsese has 17 cameras trained closely on the action. Shot over two nights at New York's Beacon Theatre in the fall of 2006, the concert is a mixed bag. "Jumpin' Jack Flash," "Satisfaction" and especially that tedious Microsoft anthem, "Start Me Up," are rote at best. But Shine a Light discovers magic in lesser-known tracks from Exile on Main St. and Some Girls, often capturing intimate onstage moments as Mick and the boys seem to truly enjoy playing the numbers they aren't forced to perform every damn night. (In the suburbs.)

Speed Racer ★★ ½ This summer's designated critical whipping-boy is indeed a bit garish and about twice as long as it needs to be, but anyone who's ever seen a Matrix movie will tell you that the Wachowski brothers have a knack for gumming up simple sagas in endless, expository convolutions. To that end, Speed Racer is the first kiddie flick to contain diatribes about corporate sponsorship and make stock market manipulation central to the plot. Yet as far as pure visual expression goes, this is genuinely groundbreaking, with folding flashbacks, crosscuts and simultaneous planes of action forming a whizzing barrage of breathtaking images. With real-life actors existing quite comfortably in an almost entirely computer-generated universe, this often tacky, weirdly heartfelt movie is perhaps best appreciated by children, who are more likely to respond to the sleek pictorial storytelling without paying mind to the Wachowskis' usual messianic jibber-jabber. These guys could be geniuses if they ever get out of their own way. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

The Strangers ★★ First-time writer-director Bryan Bertino displays a tremendous knack for widescreen compositions but unfortunately little else in this grim technical exercise. Liv Tyler and Scott Speedman whimper effectively as a hapless yuppie couple besieged and tortured by masked home invaders, in what ultimately amounts to yet another remake of Funny Games, only missing the academic pedantry and contempt. Bertino and cinematographer Peter Sova are obvious students of early John Carpenter movies, as they eschew modern shock cuts in favor of classically constructed, languorous long shots, which allow background and foreground planes of action to work against one another in a truly unsettling fashion. But to what end? Mercilessly stripped down to the barest of bones, The Strangers doesn't have a plot, just an unfortunate situation. There's no subtext here—heck, there's hardly any text—only an empty, mechanical excellence. Bertino knows how to make a movie. All he needs is time to come up with a story, and we'll have someone to watch. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

The Visitor ★★★ ½ Wonderful character actor Richard Jenkins finally gets a chance to shine as a leading man in writer-director Tom McCarthy's warm, beautifully understated New York story. Jenkins stars as a gruff, emotionally constipated college professor who strikes up an unlikely friendship with a Syrian immigrant (Haaz Sleiman) and begins to reconnect with his better self, finally venturing out in bustling Greenwich Village and even learning how to play the African drum. As in his delightful debut film, The Station Agent, McCarthy demonstrates a rare gift for observing behavior, allowing his characters to grow and letting their silences speak volumes. But just when you're settling in for yet another "white guy learns a lesson from minorities" homily, the film takes a sharp left turn into darker waters. Without getting preachy, the movie paints a vivid portrait of a post-9/11 America governed by confusion and fear. McCarthy never pushes the material, shrewdly understanding that Jenkins' sad eyes can tell the whole story. (At Kendall Square and Waltham Embassy.)

Monkey Business

Better think twice about taunting primates at the zoo. The cult sci-fi hit Planet of the Apes (1968), coming to the Brattle Theatre June 13 and 14, is sure to make you question who's in charge. And if director Franklin Schaffer's action scenes don't excite, at least you'll appreciate the ape makeup (which took a crew of 80 artists) and Charlton Heston's first nude scene.

NATURE'S EDGE

José González strips his influences to their acoustic core.

José González plays the Museum of Fine Arts June 18.

Frederik Egerstrand

JOSÉ GONZÁLEZ WAS PURSUING a PhD in biochemistry when he settled on a new path, traversing the world as an alt-folk troubadour. "I'm pretty comfortable without feeling that I need to go back to biochemistry," he says. "It takes a lot of effort to do research, and it can be very stressful. And it's a lot easier to live a life of touring and being a slacker."

Not that González has acted much like a slacker. Over the past few years, he has crisscrossed America several times, mainly as a solo artist, but also as a featured guest with the down-tempo group Zero 7. In Boston, he has played rock clubs as well as the Museum of Fine Arts, where he returns June 18 to open a series at the Calderwood Courtyard that also includes dates by Beth Orton and Grizzly Bear.

González has won favor in indie-rock nation with an unusually low-key attack. His hypnotic nylon-string guitar work and introspective vocals reflect such far-ranging influences as Cuba's Silvio Rodríguez and Brazil's João Gilberto in addition to Elliott Smith, Nick Drake and Cat Power—not the usual ingredients for a high profile.

"I've been very fortunate the last two years," González, 29, says from his home in Gothenburg, Sweden, before he heads back to the United States for a tour that hits Bonnaroo the week before the MFA. "It seems people know what they're getting, so they come to listen more than chat."

González developed his broad musical diet at an early age. "At 14, I was really into Misfits and Black Flag and De La Soul, Public Enemy and A Tribe Called Quest," he says of his punk/hip-hop roots, which led him to play bass in Gothenburg hardcore bands.

Despite a later turn to indie-rock that launched his more experimental band Junip, the classical guitar has stuck with him more than the rock. "I enjoy both, but the classical guitar is what I do best," González says. "I hear people saying they like the stripped-down quality to it. I like this style mainly because it's simplistic in a way, and I'm trying to get to the core of the songs."

While González is Swedish-born, his parents hail from Argentina, a country that influenced his acoustic sound, which employs minimal percussion and backing vocals. "My dad is very musical," González says. "He used to sing in an Argentinean folklore group, and that sort of music always has nylon-string guitar and percussion."

González's solo debut Veneer was originally released in Sweden in 2003, and his follow-up, In Our Nature, appeared in 2007. "I've sort of found this path that I haven't heard too many other people do," says González, whose second solo effort projects a slightly darker edge, particularly in the weight of his lyrics.

"Someday you'll be up to your knees in the shit you seed," he sings on opener "How Low," one of a few antiwar tracks. In the standout "Killing for Love," his mantra "What's the point with a love that makes you hate and kill for?" draws momentum from cyclical finger-picking that evokes the buoyant feel of West African pop, another influence on González's musical palette. And the lyrics connect with the CD title, which concerns human nature.

"When I'm trying to write angry stuff, it comes down to things that are very typical for humans, [which is] to be egotistical or tribalistic or violent," says González, who next plans to reconvene Junip for a record that retains his nylon-string guitar, but taps into more droning distortion.

In Our Nature provides the bridge. "My aim was to try and write less personal stuff," he says of the disc. "On my scale, it's being very angry, although I'm aware that it's pretty mellow." ***

As She Is

Keys Note After adding a few acting gigs to her résumé in dramatic masterpieces like the Dove deodorant miniseries aired during commercial breaks for The Hills, Alicia Keys returns to her roots with the As I Am tour, hitting TD Banknorth Garden on June 11. She skipped out on Columbia University for a career in music and, thankfully for her record label, has never looked back. Distinguished by her smooth vocals and—gasp—ability to write and perform original material, the soulful songstress has dominated the scene since she was a mere 19 years old, somehow managing to avoid the vacuum of tabloid rags and gossip blogs. If nine Grammys and 20 million albums sold are any indication, Keys will no doubt deliver a powerhouse performance sure to overshadow her newfound (and hopefully short-lived) thespianism. Guess that means The Nanny Diaries, Part II would be a no-go.

SIMPLE. STYLISH. SEXY. SUSHI.

If you have not been there, chances are you know someone who has – and they can't wait to go back. This hidden gem, located in the lobby area of the Westin Hotel Copley Square, serves up the finest sushi and Japanese cuisine in town – maybe any town this side of Tokyo. With a local fascination and an international repeat clientele, this 41-seat quaint and timeless restaurant is a popular staple that keeps on reinventing itself. The philosophy is simple: OSUSHI's commitment to authentic Japanese cuisine is its secret. You will NOT find "fusion" sushi here. The menu offers unmatched creativity and guests will admire the "raw" sophistication of the pallet of a culture which has enjoyed the art of sushi for millennia. If you've not been there... you've simply got to go!

DOUBLE TROUBLE

[MAY 21–JUNE 20]
You could easily become the bride that the Bull (see below) is taking pictures of. There's nothing as conducive to romance or pure love (we won't discuss wedding gifts yet) as the merging of beauteous, bountiful Venus and the life-giving sun in your sign. Embrace all that is high and holy while that loving duo trines spiritual Neptune in your house of lifelong aspirations. Don't let rebellious Uranus throw you off course as you wend your way through the tail end of Gemini. Once summer begins, the best intentions fade away.

CANCER [June 21–July 22]
Moon Children—especially those born close to the Gemini cusp—may remember what it felt like when Pluto crossed from Sagittarius to their Capricorn complement in January. Well, the God of the Underworld is crossing over again, only now he's in reverse. Whether he'll destroy what has been accomplished in the past five months is one of those Plutonic mysteries we've come to expect and accept. As first Venus, then the sun confronts Pluto, there are bound to be more revelations.

LEO [July 23–August 22]
For a change, folks seem more involved with your partner than with the Lion right now. Don't be surprised if you tend to align with a group, be it mutual friends or an association that is drawn to Neptune in your Aquarius complement. Seriously, does this person need a hug or a bigger role? Is he or she merely vulnerable or delusional? Be aware that the closer feisty Mars in Leo gets to a full-on confrontation with Neptune, the greater your resentment. You have until June 21 to come up with a solution that suits you both.

VIRGO [August 23–September 22]
The ways of the working world, the challenges and hoped-for rewards could be revealed in a short span of time. When the sun in your Gemini career house tests unpredictable Uranus on June 12, there's no way to know how your business or life partner will react. Because your Mercury ruler is retrograde in Gemini until June 19, try to hold off forming any opinion until you see what the favorable trine on June 14 between the sun and artistic Neptune in your house of romance and other creative pursuits brings. Patience, please.

LIBRA [September 23–October 22]
Speed is not your friend. Don't jump to conclusions or make a hasty decision on June 12 when your Venus ruler, in the sign of the Twins, squares erratic Uranus, in the sign of two Fish. Dualities abound. Not until amenable Venus perfects a supportive alliance with idealistic Neptune in your Aquarius house of romance will you feel you're back in your element, that you've regained your equilibrium. Once Venus enters your Cancer midheaven on June 18, career concerns can take up more of your time and attention.

SCORPIO [October 23–November 21]
Watch your step. Your retrograde Pluto coruler is crossing the border between pragmatic Capricorn, where it's been since January, and philosophical Sagittarius on Friday the 13th. While superstitions might not carry much weight anymore, this change of signs can affect your outlook. And because Pluto is in your house of personal finances, the move could also affect your bank balance, especially when Venus and the sun oppose Pluto next week. Meanwhile your energetic Mars coruler should keep your Leo career house hopping.

SAGITTARIUS [November 22–December 21] Pluto backing into your sign after months in Capricorn can reintroduce or reinforce what was going on during the Christmas holiday—only now, significant others could exert a greater impact than they did then. Venus transiting your Gemini marriage house may have a juicy bone to pick, while the willful sun can force a power play when it opposes Pluto around the solstice. Meanwhile, an unstable situation at the house or within the family circle could deteriorate while the Gemini planets test unruly Uranus. Keep the first aid kit handy.

CAPRICORN [December 22–January 20]
Any activity involving the solstice and equinox points will usually put all four cardinal signs on edge. So as Venus and the sun approach Cancer and retrograde Pluto backtracks to Capricorn, take a page from the Libra playbook and try to stay on an even keel. No need to hide out like a hermit Crab or go on the offensive like an assertive Aries would. An evolved Capricorn will find a way to hold its ground. Nonetheless, there could be a disruption in the neighborhood when the potent sun squares destructive Uranus on June 12.

AQUARIUS [January 21–February 18]
The focus soon shifts to impressionable Neptune in your sign; but not until Venus, the vixen and the versatile Gemini sun provoke your Uranus ruler on June 12. Will your loving heart be shaken or gently stirred? Since inventive Uranus dominates your Pisces house of assets and values, it wouldn't hurt to ask: What will this cost me? Meanwhile, keep an eye on how militant Mars is affecting your partner as the fiery planet parades through your marriage house. Passion on that side of the bed, compassion on yours?

PISCES [February 19–March 19]
Read for Aquarius. Once again, the two signs are on similar wavelengths, and while the challenges may not be identical, they're scheduled to crop up at the same time. Hard aspects from the dualistic Gemini planets to Uranus in your sign can test how you're reinventing yourself, while the positive aspects to your ambiguous Neptune ruler that follow could reinforce the image you would like to project. This is a subtle yet complicated situation, one that the subtle yet complex Piscean mind may appreciate over time.

ARIES [March 20–April 19]
It's not a three-way yet, but it looks like the rapport building between you, a neighbor and somebody else will soon be coming to a head. Perhaps, for now, you're merely exchanging ideas, although with your horny Mars ruler in demonstrative Leo, physical contact might not be far behind. Just remind yourself that as Mars approaches its opposition to vaporous Neptune, your objective could easily slip from your grasp. Even if you aren't being played, when dealing with the elusive butterfly of love, it's still "Catch me if you can."

TAURUS [April 20–May 20]
June bride, Gay Pride, pop tune, high noon—sounds like image-conscious Neptune in the crown position of your solar chart, your career midheaven. However, if you're not a musician, wedding photographer or person of faith per se, your appreciative Venus ruler can help you profit from these professions while she transits through your money house. That is, if the goddess doesn't get waylaid by an unexpected encounter with erotic Uranus around June 12. But if she and you stay focused, you could do quite well for yourself.

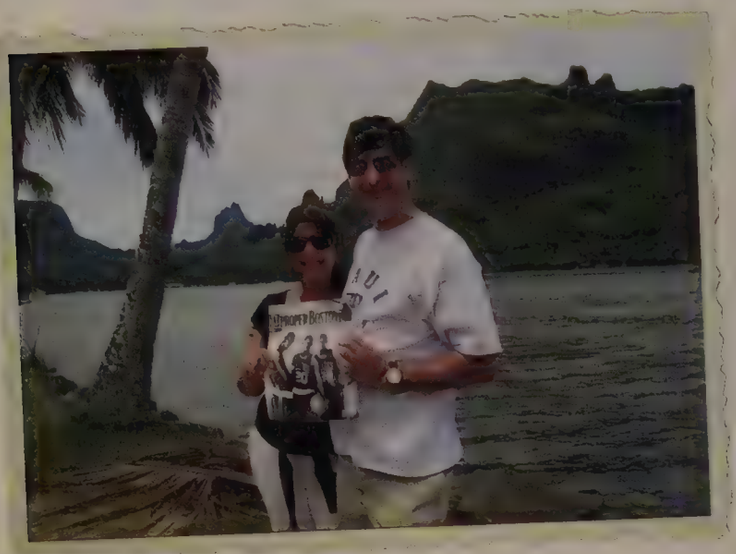
ATTENTION BOUNTY HUNTERS! BONUS POINTS TO ANYONE WHO CAN CAPTURE AN IMPROPER READER SCREAMING, "I'M A MER-MAN!" AT THE MERMAID PARADE, HELD JUNE 21 IN CONEY ISLAND, N.Y.

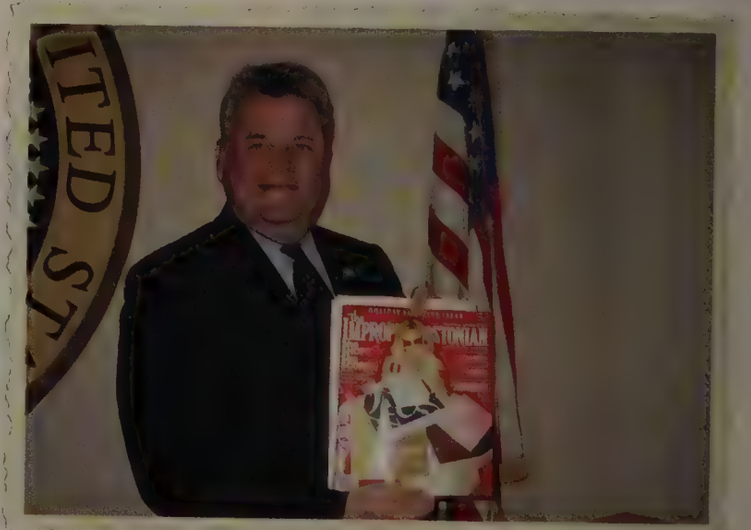
Unlike the rest of your friends, we want to see the photos from your next trip. Where did you take us? Send us a picture of you or a buddy, or better yet, someone famous reading THE IMPROPER BOSTONIAN and tell us where you were. The wilder your destination and the more creative your photo, the better your chances of making the cut in the esteemed IMPROPER Sightings.



Audrey Winter and Bruce Driben spent their honeymoon in Tahiti with THE IMPROPER and the Celtics. They said it was a lot of fun but that KG kept hogging the covers.

David and Debbie Winnick visited the Aztec ruins outside Mexico City with an IMPROPER from 2003. David was heard saying, "Hmm—I wonder how this Ortiz guy will pan out for the Sox?"

Lauren Goldfarb and Annie Pickert struck a pose on South Mountain in Phoenix, Ariz. We're not sure what sort of pose. Maybe it's called "Agony of the Groin."



Seattle mayor Greg Nickels posed with THE IMPROPER and a look that said, "If I had a nickel for every time someone made fun of my last name..."

Gabriel Frasca at the Nantucket Wine Festival

Lisa Hughes at the Justine Liff Luncheon

Roberta Weiner at the Heart Ball

Snap, Crackle and...

Opening Night at Pops was unforgettable last year due to the fistfight that broke out in the balcony; this year it was because of special guest Natalie Cole.

Not that Lockhart & Co. didn't acquit themselves nicely during the first half of the program, but the crowd really warmed up when the pop princess appeared on stage, performing songs both old and new, as well as recreating her 1991 video duet with her father.

As they sang "Unforgettable," one guest made the truly tasteless remark, "Thank God it's not Alzheimer's Night at Pops."

Meanwhile, when asked before the concert about the odds of another fight breaking out this year, managing director Mark Volpe put them at "one in seven," Lockhart guessed "zero, because lightning never strikes in the same place twice," and a bartender said, "Slim to none... unless you start it, which is why I'm not betting."

Inside the hall, at one cluster of tables, were deans of Boston broadcasting Ron della Chiesa, John Henning, Frank Avruch and Joyce Kulhawik, who joked that they'd be the likely group to start a dust-up, della Chiesa adding, "And Kulhawik would win. The rest of us are old farts."

The Only One Missing Was the Tin Man...

The best place in Boston to have acute angina (insert your own sophomoric joke here) is undoubtedly the American Heart Association's *Heart Ball, held at the Westin Waterfront.

The world's top heart doctors are all there (Larry Cohn, Kenny Rosenfield and the rest), not to mention such high-wattage socialites as Roberta and Steve Weiner, emcee Liz Bruner, restaurateur Greg DenHurder and his stunning other half, Jada, noted educator Andy Rushford and his high-powered wife, Kate Shamon, a red-haired guy driving one of those new Bentleys, etc., etc., who made for a party that one guest described as "half boring doctors and half really fabulous people, which makes the dance floor absolutely hilarious."

Here's to the Ladies Who Lunch...

It wasn't superficiality so much as all the picture hats that caused a flurry of air-kissing at the Justine Liff Luncheon to benefit the Emerald Necklace Conservancy.

Held beneath a sumptuously decorated tent in the Fens, it attracted the XX chromosome contingent of Boston's Who's Who, like cochairs Pam Lazares and Jane Roy, head honcha Anne Hawley of the Gardner Museum, statuesque blonde Alli Achtmeyer, anchor babe Lisa Hughes of WBZ-TV Channel 4, and Philanthroposaurus Rexes Joan and Ted Cutler, who've been honored at seemingly every other benefit this year and deserve it.

The afternoon's funniest remark: One stunning blonde arrived at the party with an enormous grin and said, "As of 6 o'clock last night, the papers are signed, and I'm officially divorced. Gimme a glass of champagne!"

In Vino Veritas...

Want to look conspicuous at the Nantucket Wine Festival? Forget wearing something loud—go-to-hell pants were invented on that island.

Instead, try walking around with a martini glass, which elicited the following remarks:

"Not enough variety of wines for you?" (For the record, there were more than 150.)

"Is that some varietal I've never heard of?" (Yes. Potato.)

And best of all: "What a good idea! Where did you get that?" (The bar.)

Adding to the delightfulness was the opportunity to hobnob with some interesting and notorious characters, among them: discount wino John Hafferty of Bin Ends, celebrity chefs Jody Adams, Evan Deluty, Marc Orfaly, Tony Susi, Michael LaScola and Angela Raynor, real estate titan Mark Goldweitz and his gorgeous other half, Joyce, gay (but not in a lesbian way) divorcee Cynthia Darehshori and one woman who said, "I only know the dog people in my neighborhood. Unless you own a dog or are on certain types of medication, you're not out there walkin' in circles all day." ✖✖✖

Going All the Way

There isn't much I can say about sex and love—the theme of this issue—without making my husband blush. So like a parent delivering the birds-and-the-bees talk, I'll just stick to the facts.

In these pages, Jonathan Soroff covers all things condoms. Who knew a factory in South Boston packages 40,000 rubbers a day? Taking safe sex one step further, a chastity club at Harvard is challenging the hookup culture. Freelance writer Carmen Nobel investigates the save-yourself-for-marriage movement. Not sure if these students have read any of Junot Díaz's work, but they might be shocked. See for yourself with excerpts from Díaz's "Alma," which first appeared in The New Yorker. An MIT associate professor, our cover guy won the 2008 Pulitzer Prize for fiction.

But enough about sex and love. The real story this month is the Celtics winning the NBA title. Which, come to think of it, is about love—between three guys, a coach and his players, a city and its team. To quote KG, "Top of the world!"

STELLA ARTOIS

Perfection HAS ITS PLACE

A perfectly poured Stella Artois is the Gold Standard of Belgian beer.

Step One THE PURIFICATION

The bartender selects the signature glass for the beer being poured. The glass is scrubbed in a cool-water bath, preferably with a mild detergent. It's then rinsed with cold water to chill the glass.

Step Two THE SACRIFICE

The tap is opened in one swift motion to let the first burst of foam flow away. It must never enter the glass, thus ensuring every drop of beer is fresh.

Step Three THE LIQUID ALCHEMY

The glass is held at a 45-degree angle to create the perfect balance of liquid to foam.

Step Four THE HEAD

The head is created by straightening and lowering the glass. The foam is visually appealing and releases the beer's aroma.

Step Five THE REMOVAL

The bartender closes the tap in one quick action and moves the glass away from the faucet to ensure no drops spoil the perfect head.

Step Six THE BEHEADING

While the beer is flowing over the edge of the glass, the bartender cuts the head gently with a head cutter at a 45-degree angle. This eliminates the larger bubbles that burst easily and accelerate the dissipation of the head.

Step Seven THE JUDGMENT

The bartender now stands in judgment. The beer's head should be two fingers thick.

Step Eight THE CLEANSING

The bartender then rinses the bottom and sides of the glass. This keeps the glass clean and cool and makes it comfortable to hold.

Step Nine THE BESTOWAL

A perfectly poured pint of Belgian beer is presented with the logos of the coaster and glass facing the customer.

Piercing Victory

CAPTAIN COURAGEOUS

The two bookends of Paul Pierce's NBA Finals: getting carried off the court with a knee injury in Game 1, and leaping onto a podium, MVP trophy in hand, at the end of Game 6.

The Truth's journey has gone from Inglewood, Calif., to "Beat L.A.!" From worst team in the league to top of the world. Before his long-awaited parade, 30-year-old Pierce spent his most famous drive through town stabbed and nearly bleeding to death in Tony Battie's SUV. Through it all, he's had his pride and an ever-increasing reverence for history, a quality Boston values just as much as hustle. "The Havliceks, Bill Russells, the Cousys, these guys started what's going on today with those banners," Pierce said postgame. "Now we can stand up and look them eye-to-eye and say, Hey, we accomplished it, too."

Though his career is far from over, he has faced its defining moment and triumphed. A moment that began in a heap on the parquet floor. A career that will end with his number hoisted to the rafters above.

NICK ALTSCHULLER

Drink of the Moment

Oh Yeah!

Though named for a certain jolly slugger, Tavern in the Square's Big Papi is reminiscent of another beloved cult figure. The glistening, bulbous pitcher (designated receptacle, perhaps?) brimming with a deep red concoction calls to mind someone more likely to crash through your living room wall than bang one off the Green Monster. The whole thing screams Kool-Aid Man. Laurence Maroney, you've been robbed of a signature cocktail.

The beverage honoring David Ortiz first appeared six months ago, upon the opening of Tavern's Porter Square location. "You think of tropical drinks like the piña colada or the Hurricane, and we tried to put our own twist on one," explains bar manager John Piecewicz. The resulting Big Papi ($24) is the offspring of a rum punch's roll in the hay with a Sex on the Beach, with light and dark rums, peach schnapps and purée, pineapple and orange juices, and grenadine for color. "He's a big Caribbean favorite, and we hope this is a big Caribbean favorite for us."

The house-made purée gives the Papi a juicy, natural sweetness. "It's a refreshing cocktail to enjoy on a hot summer day, and it's not too heavy, where you feel like you're drinking a ton of booze," says Piecewicz, mixing up another batch. And while the patio-set presentation isn't quintessential sports bar (some fellas ask for a pint glass), the pitcher does serve some ulterior motives, because Papi packs a wallop. "It's a little different, a little creative, but it gets the point of getting some alcohol." Pad your gullet with a chicken and pear sandwich ($9.99), and stay upright for the late-inning heroics.

Of course, Ortiz himself won't be involved in any for a while, as the big man is on the DL (another reason to drink!). Could this newly minted cocktail be cursed? Assures Piecewicz, "If it is, we'll take it off."

Question for the Boston Babydolls

How do you best and most efficiently inflame men's passions?

The Boston Babydolls are a local burlesque revue. bostonbabydolls.net

MISS MINA

There is nothing that kindles the flames of desire like an incredibly slow striptease. I can build up a remarkable amount of tension by just taking off one glove, so slowly it's painful. My chosen audience is begging to see more as the glove slides down inch by delicious inch. And that's just the first garment...

HONEY DO

I love the art of teasing—not just striptease, but also "touch tease." Leaning in for the kiss but blowing on his ear instead. Running a finger down a man's "happy trail" but not going directly for the goods. Basically creating an...ti...ci...pation. Usually it drives them wild, and then they ravage you. I love that. Basically, turning a gentleman into a beast.

BETTY BLAIZE

"Efficient"? Who wants to be efficient in their seduction? It's not like cleaning your house or invading a small country. Seduction should be fun! A lot of guys are threatened by that smoldering, come-hither look. I think the best way to seduce a man is the same way I like to be seduced—make me comfortable, make me laugh, make me feel like I can say or do anything around you... and I probably will. (But, if I'm in a hurry, I've found that [wearing] something low-cut and dancing so hard that I'm glistening with perspiration usually does the trick...)

RICH LEVINE

Good Eats

Lotta Panna Cotta

Dessert comes with a dollop, but sheer decadence is made entirely of cream. (Or close to it.) That's basically what Piedmont, Italy's silken sweet known as panna cotta (literally "cooked cream") boils down to, as proven by the version chef David Punch molds at Ten Tables. Cup upon cup of cream mimics that luscious crème fraîche texture. But too much of the white stuff is potentially palate-numbing; to cut through the fat, Punch sours his concoction with buttermilk and applies an especially light hand to the gelatin. The result is cold and impossibly creamy, and provides the ideal foil for this season's accompanying bright rhubarb compote.

SCENT-SUAL

I generally disagree with what stores consider "sexy" scents. They're too flowery, too sweet, too fruity or too musky. So through much trial-and-error and inhaling of fumes, I give you my top three picks for summer. Feminine and alluring, each has a romantic rose undertone sure to get you the right attention—without resembling a Tag commercial.

Going Out

Out of the Blue

Lydia Shire, with her wild red hair and Cavalli shades, walks through the doors of Blue Sky on York Beach to a shower of hellos from her understudies prepping by the brick oven. Shire's restaurant, which opened in November, sits on the second floor of the restored Atlantic House Hotel, looking down on the taffy shops and souvenir stands of a beachside community hoping to evolve.

When first asked to examine the property, Shire was underwhelmed. "The whole building was dilapidated, and there were skunks living in it," she recounts. "It should have been torn down." Returning months later, the chef had a change of heart. "It was a picture-perfect day, the sky was this electric shade of blue, and I just fell in love with York."

The blue sky aesthetic is now anchored in a seaside print by the door and influences the rest of the decor in this expansive, 225-seat venue. Shire chose many of the design elements herself, like the chocolate-colored walls, the custom, copyrighted chairs, and the wood floor and ceiling. "I wanted it to be modern, but a Maine modern," she explains.

The same description can be applied to the menu, newly tweaked by Shire and former Sibling Rivalry chef Jake Smith. "It's New England, so there's lots of lobster," she says. Grilled lobster with Lydia's tomalley stuffing ($48) is one iteration. "It's just going to be things that I love. The older I get, the more I rely on my own judgment. Sometimes I think chefs try to be who they're not, and I just try to be who I am."

Since her days at Biba, one of Shire's trademarks has been her lobster pizza ($24), a dish diners have come to expect and that now has foodies driving the 90 minutes north to try it in another locale. Lobster's decadent and all, but there's got to be something more to the preparation, right? "We do one thing that a lot of other people don't do," Shire teases. "It's the only secret I want to keep."

With baskets of crisped gray sole with crab biscuits ($32) and hot raised potato doughnuts with Lyles golden syrup ($4), she's prepared to impress her first wave of flip-flopped vacationers used to clam strips and fried dough. "When you love Maine, you really love it," Shire says. "It's something you don't get out of your body, and when people say you've made a difference in the community, how do you replace that?"

MEAN GUY AND GIRLS

TO THE ELDERLY LADY ON THE ORANGE LINE:

I know I should have been a gentleman and given up my seat to you, but I was having a shitty day, and all I wanted to do was sit and not deal with anyone. I'm sorry that I kept ignoring the fact that you were struggling to stay on your feet, but what can I say? I was being selfish and a real jerk. Hopefully the next time I see you, I'll be having a better day, and I'll gladly give up my seat for you.

Regretfully yours,
The Man Who Wouldn't

Dear Malicious Movie-goer:

Obviously, you're well aware of who I am. You must be, considering you described my physical characteristics and fabulous ensemble to the manager of Flagship Cinemas at the 9:55 pm showing of Sex and the City. After reporting me for illegally videotaping the movie—which you made up because I don't own a video camera and was carrying a pink sequined clutch that wouldn't fit an extra-thick maxi pad—you must have been tapping your evil fingers together and throwing your head back in laughter as I was escorted out of the theater by a police officer. In the little time I've spent concerned about you and your heinous existence, I've tried to determine why you would do such a thing to a stranger. Whatever the reason, I just want you to hear this: It's people like you who give women a bad rap. Your bitchiness causes people to not want to vote for female politicians [and] to make movies like Mean Girls that point out the ridiculousness of the fairer sex. Not to mention the fact that the one thing we have in common is centered on women who would do anything for each other. I don't know you, but as a fellow SATC fan and a human being, I would have at least been cordial to you. Instead, I choose to curse the day you were born, using an angry hand gesture.

Sincerely,
Shoegal II

To the overweight woman who flipped me off at the light on Totten Pond Road:

Were you too dumb to notice the New Jersey license plate? I just moved into my Waltham apartment this past weekend, and I don't know my way around yet. Yes, I was in the right-turn-only lane, and I meant to go straight. I saw you throw up your hands in frustration, and then you beeped at me and pointed at the light. Yes, lady, I KNOW I can take a right on red. I signaled to you I wasn't going right, I was trying to go straight. If I could've moved over and let you through, I would have, but I had nowhere to [go]—you knew that. Unless you were too blinded by road rage to notice we were surrounded by construction. Was it really so difficult to wait for the light to turn green? Was it really necessary for you to flip me off as I went my way and you went yours? Get some patience, and while you're at it, jump on a treadmill. Thanks for the warm welcome, ahole.

Love,

ASK THE SEXPERT

Q: IN YOUR ESTIMATION, HOW MANY TIMES A WEEK DO PEOPLE IN A HAPPY RELATIONSHIP/MARRIAGE HAVE SEX?

ALINE P. ZOLDBROD LICENSED PSYCHOLOGIST AND AASECT-CERTIFIED SEX THERAPIST IN LEXINGTON

Ah... the dreaded normalcy question. One of the things that makes being a sex therapist so much fun is that the range of "normal" is so huge. People who are out in search of love should pray to the love gods that they fall in love with someone whose true, inherent sex drive is roughly equal to their own. What makes people sexually happy in a serious relationship is having predictably fun, flexible, enthusiastic, caring and aroused sex with a partner who wants to have sex with them roughly as often as they want to. What makes it such a miracle to get this is that people are so rotten at predicting their baseline sex drive over time. Lust addles one's mind and inflames the sex drive, temporarily. Children, work stress, and the ridiculously harried and ambitious lifestyle in Boston are profoundly anti-erotic. If you live here, are physically healthy, are with someone you love and have been with for several years, have a job and have really good sex with them at least once a week, trust me, you're leading a charmed life.

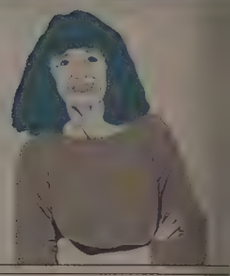
BAD AND GOOD SEEDS

On a fractured family and a great garden center



A True Confession

THE O'BRIEN FAMILY is wrapped in the themes of its time (the early '70s) and place (Boston), indeed twistedly so in Kate Genovese's novel. Dad is a powerful, hypocritically unfaithful senator in Washington whose depressed wife, Marie, mother of five, sadly turns a blind eye to her kids' modern problems as she—yes—clings to her old-fashioned religion. The story focuses on the angrily rebellious Molly, who becomes an unwed mother (the dad's a burgeoning baseball star) and an addict, following that long and bumpy road to eventual sobriety. With intertwining sex abuse stories, her brother, Sean, is both plucked from legal scrapes by his father's influence and ignored as a real, suffering guy. Mom and dad respectively, and obliviously, blame original sin and society. Sean fathers one child in Vietnam and another in Boston, and following his cowardly, caddish behavior evolves into a somewhat responsible antiwar activist. Vividly, Genovese moves through multiple disasters toward very convoluted redemption, proposing sex abuse as one toxic germ that infects and unravels these scary, shaggy lives.

Two Weeks Since My Last Confession is by Kate Genovese, who lives in the Boston area.

FLOWER POWER Ricky DiGiovanni and his blooms

The Constant Gardener

A COLORFUL JUNGLE blossoms in Somerville at Ricky's Flower Mart, starring the smiling Ricky DiGiovanni himself. "We have the freshest, happiest plants," DiGiovanni says, pointing to the triangle-shaped purple lupine, intricately decorated with tiny bell-like flowers sprawling with a zillion jagged leaves. Scrunched nearby, there's the woodsy foxglove (amusingly called Bloody Fingers) with some oh-so-aromatic jasmine wafting its scent through the greenery. Ricky's—with abundantly burgeoning boxes of pansies and petunias—has cunningly varied its landscape, here displaying English-style hay racks that serve as country-esque planters, there showing shady areas full of pots. Blood-red hibiscus sticks out its tongue, and pink clematis, with its gigantic flowers, gazes at you at eye-level. Romantic pink lemonade honeysuckle wraps itself around a pole. And you can get those vines that grow over a frame on a Somerville driveway, creating instant-Italy, shady and green. Way back, behind a refreshing fountain concocted from barrels, are vegetables: tomatoes, peppers, nutritious kale, eggplant and cilantro.

Ricky's Flower Mart (238 Washington St., Somerville; 617-628-7569; rickysflowermarket.com) is in Union Square.

Smell the Roses For Maura Kilpatrick, it seems like everything is coming up roses. Literally. Just a few weeks ago, Oleana's illustrious pastry chef received the season's first delivery of wild-growing rugosas from Eva Sommaripa (of Eva's Garden), which she plucks from beach bushes along Westport shores. Back in the kitchen, Kilpatrick simmers the hot-pink petals in simple syrup until the jam gels, and then feeds its perfume with rosewater and fresh lemon juice. Sweet tooths should have no trouble tracing its scent to the Siena Farms stand, to the retail case at soon-to-open Sofra Bakery and Cafe, or to the restaurant's dessert menu. Saucing goat's milk Turkish ice cream in a pool of the jam is native to Middle Eastern cuisine, according to Kilpatrick, and also "very, very Oleana."

NO WAITING FOR ESTRAGON

Tapas territory expands.

Just around the corner from Toro, Ken Oringer's fabulously successful tapas bar, Estragon has opened on Harrison Avenue with a spacious dining room, a salon-style lounge and an adjacent store selling Spanish specialty foods.

Co-owners Julio de Haro (the former owner of Taberna de Haro in Brookline) and Lara Gavigan have created a cool, sleek restaurant on the ground floor of a new condominium complex at the gritty edge of the South End, near the flower market and Boston City Medical Center. Like the retro sofas upholstered in vintage brocade and leopard prints that hark back to Art Deco's heyday, the menu combines "very traditional" tapas with "a more modern take, like the sea urchin and foie gras slider," says Gavigan. Estragon is open nightly until 1 am, although the kitchen closes at 12:30.

Hey, Patrick Connolly! Now that you've won the James Beard Award for Best Chef—Northeast after five years at Radius, what will you do next?

"I'm relocating to New York in a month!" he laughs. So, Boston isn't big enough for your talent anymore? "It's hard to avoid giving that impression," Connolly admits, but he adds that the move was already in the works and that he never expected the coveted Beard Award.

"No way, no how, no chance in hell!" he says emphatically. And is a New York restaurant eagerly awaiting his arrival? "No, I don't have a job yet," says Connolly. "Maybe [the award] will help." Yeah, maybe... good luck!

Boston Public is no longer open to the public... or to the private, for that matter. An apparent casualty of tight economic times, or perhaps of Louis' plan to leave the building in 2010, Pino Maffeo's Asian-influenced steakhouse closed quietly a couple weeks ago.

SUBURBAN STUNNER

Wellesley's Vela is worth the trip for satisfying Italian.

I WAS ABOUT TO MAKE my final visit to a tiny Italian restaurant. It had scored rave reviews for what I'd found to be mediocre food at laughably inflated prices. Dubious that both my meals could have been off-nights, but eager to be fair, I intended to try it again. My attempt was aborted when I learned that the restaurant had been put on the market by its owners. Shifting gears from pricey and pretentious to down-to-earth and affordable, I trekked to Vela on Washington Street in Wellesley. It didn't disappoint.

Vela's charm starts with its physical setting, a nondescript apartment building on Route 16. A handsome etched-glass window adorns its slightly weather-beaten front door, which leads down a few steps into a pleasant, comfy space with a clean design. The dining room seats about 100 on wooden, fan-backed chairs and banquettes at tables dressed in crisp white linens. Al fresco dining beckons from an outside terrace. Matching the surroundings, a friendly, gracious waiter served us attentively on our visits, answering our questions as best he could, admitting what he didn't know and subsequently returning with the missing information after inquiring in the kitchen, where executive chef/owner Frank Santonastaso mans the stove. A Newton native, Santonastaso previously worked at Lucca in the North End.

GET STUFFED House-made ravioli filled with Serrano ham and mascarpone

His crispy cod cheeks ($10), four lightly breaded, deep-fried hunks of fresh fish with a roasted red pepper aioli, made an excellent starter. The antipasto plate ($12) included a generous portion of imported prosciutto, creamy mozzarella, red cherry peppers stuffed with gorgonzola cheese, marinated eggplant and tender artichoke hearts in a vinaigrette, among other items. A first course of mixed greens ($8), primarily frisée, featured a well-balanced carrot dressing. Sweet-tart pickled onions enhanced this simple palate perker, but small triangles of toast, apparently made from Vela's undistinguished focaccia, did not.

Pastas, a strong suit at the restaurant, included a spaghetti carbonara. Cooked to perfect al dente texture, it hovered between resilience and tenderness, while the sauce combined the rich, sweet-salty flavor of Parmesan cheese with the smoky accents of Italian bacon in a top-rate rendering of this classic. House-made ravioli were filled with Serrano ham and mascarpone, with a garnish of fresh peas and a sprig of mint. Baked rigatoni bolognese satisfied the carnivorous gene with its meaty sauce, smoky tomato and creamy fontina cheese. Finally, house-made fettuccine noodles had a tasty sauce of crunchy shrimp, garlic, chili flakes, white wine and arugula. All the above pastas came as smaller "primi" or as larger "secondi" courses at $9 and $16, respectively.

Of the main entrees, five meaty rib chops of mild, succulent Colorado lamb ($30) arrived with pleasantly bitter spinach and a mountain of roasted potatoes spiked with rosemary. Olive-crusted tuna ($28), despite its delightful layer of tapenade, suffered from coarse, almost tough texture. Far better, and the prize-winner one evening, the chicken saltimbocca ($23) featured cutlets layered with thin slices of prosciutto and a slab of fontina cheese, sautéed in butter, creating an irresistible sauce.

Desserts, often an afterthought at Italian restaurants, sparkled. Flourless chocolate cake ($8), moist and velvety, came with a marvelous garnish of fresh raspberries, blueberries, strawberries and a scoop of Christina's ice cream. The flavor and texture of Vela's tiramisu ($8) made it another extraordinary ending to a fine meal. The wines, less reasonably priced than the food, included a Zonin Montepulciano d'Abruzzi ($32), fruity but well-structured, and Falesco ($35), a more tannic, full-bodied red from Umbria.

As good as Vela was during the week, it got even better on the weekend. For the remarkable price of $25 at its Sunday Pasta Night, the restaurant offers a salad, followed by a choice of two out of five pastas, brought piping hot to the table in individual bowls, and finished with the superb tiramisu. It made me wonder why anyone in Wellesley would ever cook at home on such evenings. ✖✖✖

SUMMER OF FUN

The SOF heads south, all the way to Marina Bay.

THE OTHER DAY, my wife, Heather, came home with prenatal vitamins. I'm no ob-gyn, but I can read the writing on the wall—first it's prenatal vitamins, then it's natal vitamins, then it's Flintstones vitamins. I thought I married a hot younger woman to forestall this day a while longer—until I'd written a series of successful novels and caught a world-record marlin—but then I did the math and discovered that Heather's 28 already. They grow up so fast.

Since both of us realize that this is probably our last year sans offspring, we've dubbed summer 2008 the Summer of Fun. The mission statement for the SOF is to have as much fun as humanly possible before we have to start thinking about diapers and polio vaccines and whatever else it is that people who have babies think about. Not that having babies isn't a whole 'nother kind of fun! But for right now, if there's vomit on my collar, I want it to be my own.

On that note, I decided it was high time that the Summer of Fun rolled into Marina Bay, so I put my boat in the water and booked a slip for the weekend. Immediate observation about Marina Bay: Everybody is inordinately friendly. People wave, they say hi, and a guy even hopped off his boat to help me dock the Screaming Seagull. Since I was alone and my docking technique at that point involved gunning the motor while smashing into docks, other boats and the occasional car up in the parking lot, I appreciated this unsolicited help immensely. Once the Seagull was safely tethered, I took a look around and realized why everyone was so happy: They were all drunk. OK, maybe not everyone, but a decent percentage of boats featured their cheery owners perched nearby on a lawn chair next to a cooler of Bud Light. It was the kind of scene that moves Jimmy Buffett to verse.

Soon after my harrowing dock ordeal, a bunch of friends arrived and we commenced to imitate our neighbors and soak up the sun and a few cocktails. We had dinner at Siros on the boardwalk, at which point we arrived at the fork in the road of our night. I was full, sleepy and content. Ready to go home, really. Then my friend Scott ordered two Red Bull and vodkas, and, as tends to happen when El Toro Rojo is involved, the evening went in a very different direction. One minute you're ready for bed, and the next thing you know, you're playing beach volleyball at 1 am.

Not that having babies isn't fun! But for right now, if there's vomit on my collar, I want it to be my own.

I think the 1 am volleyball might've been where I lost my keys. It's hard to say. All I know is that we made our way over to the Marina Bay Beach Club, and that's when things got out of hand. I never went to the place in its former WaterWorks incarnation because I had a preconceived notion that it was frequented by dudes with blowouts and gold chains and Under Armour club shirts saturated in Axe body spray.

The tableau that we actually discovered was much different. A giant outdoor bar. Palm trees. Sand. Go-go dancers. Cabanas. Hot chicks everywhere. Great music. And beach volleyball. "Why have we never been here before?" Heather asked. Probably because it's in Quincy, and Quincy just doesn't seem like the kind of place you'd expect to find a New England outpost of South Beach. But there it is. I was extremely fired up.

Unfortunately, in our excitement we made a rookie mistake typical of BU juniors out in Faneuil Hall. Instead of leaving 15 minutes early and snagging a taxi, we waited until the club actually closed and the departing mob swarmed all available cabs. Lacking anything else to do, we headed back down to the boat.

While Heather and her friend Ashley sobered up, Scott and I embraced the opportunity to take the after-party to the dock. Actually, Scott took the party all the way into the ocean, deciding that 2 am is a perfect time to practice backflips off the dock. I was still of sound enough judgment to avoid this activity on the grounds that I would either drown or emerge from the turbid water looking like an Exxon Valdez animal. Indeed, after his swim, Scott complained that the back of his throat burned, but I reassured him that it was probably just diesel.

The next morning, I felt like I'd had a night out in Vegas—that sensation that you're not even hungover because you might still be drunk, and you can't go back to sleep because there are latent molecules of Red Bull attached to your brain. But you know, it's life experiences like this that'll make me a better parent someday. That's what I'm telling Heather, because even in the Summer of Fun we'll make some honest mistakes along the way, and maybe next time she'll get prenatal vitamins that don't look so much like Advil. ✖✖✖

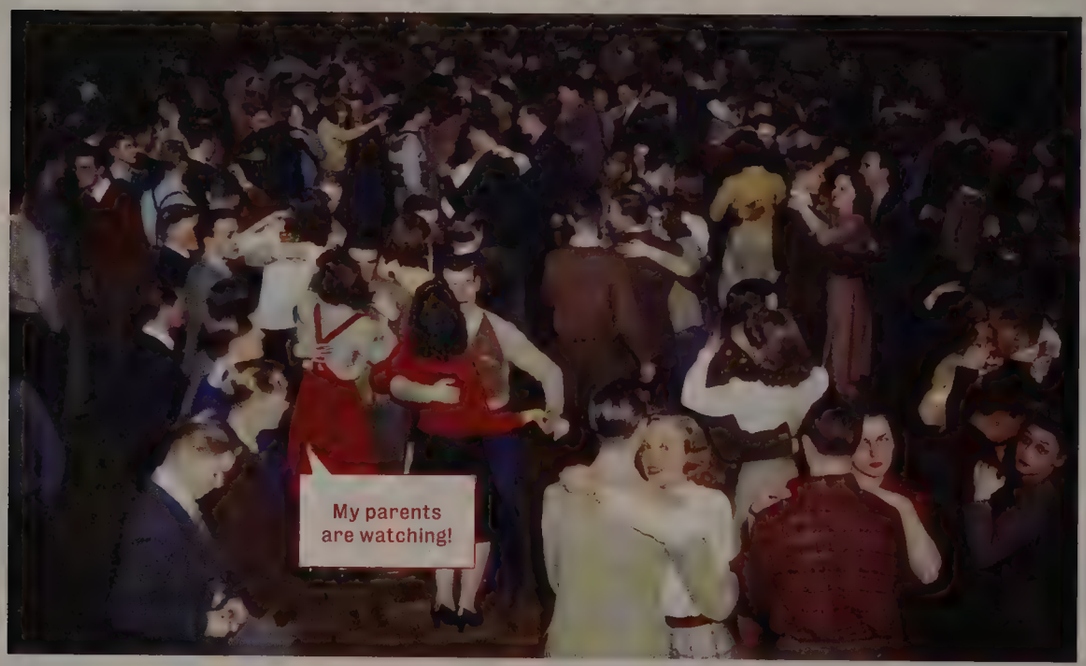
Tales of yearning at the junior prom and at the beach



THE PHILOSOPHER Havelock Ellis wrote, "The omnipresent process of sex, as it is woven into the whole texture of our man's or woman's body, is the pattern of all the process of our life." I believe this is true. But if you mix in love, and if you're honest, the two concepts often blur and clash with disastrous results. In this country—up until the mid-1960s, when Vietnam really heated up—almost all of my friends got hitched within weeks of graduating from college, to whomever they were dating at the end of senior year. More then 50 percent, the national norm, of their marriages ended in divorce. What did they know? They were kids. Of course, many of them confused love with sex.

I remember when the "l" word first surfaced in my life. It was my junior year in high school at the prom. Our theme was "Under the Sea," and the gym was transformed into a nautical mix of nets, cardboard mermaids and fake fish. In a miracle of technology, strobe lights, in reds and greens, beamed across the gym floor while the tuxedoed dance band played slow and romantic until couples got too close.

Slow dances, of course, were where you learned how your date really felt about you. But that night I was more worried about dodging my parents than taking the temperature of my date's affections. They were class chaperones, a social catastrophe. In my generation no parents came to our games, no parents sacrificed their weekends for our pleasure; playpens were embraced, not banished. And not one of my friends ever wanted his parents to meet a girlfriend. From the minute the prom began, I steered my date to corners, then hid behind groups of classmates.

But we took to the bleachers during a band break, and my mother, scanning the scene like a submarine skipper moving the periscope across the sea's surface (perfect for the prom's theme), saw her opening. Then my date, as we were holding hands, said, "Do you know what I'm thinking?"

"No," I answered, as my mother and father headed our way.

"I'm thinking about how much I love you," she said.

One of my many half-baked theories includes, "When something amazing happens to you, it's undercut within 24 hours by something equally bad." This was the moment when I was supposed to say something back to my date. Instead my father interjected, "You can run, but you can't hide. What's the matter, ashamed of your parents?"

All I could summon up was, "Mom, Dad, this is Stephanie." But the magic mood was broken, Slow dances were where you learned how your date really felt about you.

despite the strobe lights, despite the fact that the band started to play "Teach Me Tonight," one of the all-time great make-out songs. I bumbled through the rest of the evening and, I suppose, muttered the "l" word, wondering what magical places it could take me.

Later in my life, during a summer as a busboy on Main Street in Hyannis, I truly fell in love with one of the waitresses. Don't tell me it's a cliché and all guys are idiots. But she was almost white-blonde and had the darkest tan, it seemed, of any of the hundreds of young women working on the Cape. This was in the days when tanning meant beauty, like how a century ago portliness meant prosperity. At any rate, I thought I knew love when it hit me between the eyes but never told the waitress. I couldn't even sing her "I'll See You in September," because she went to college outside of Philadelphia.

Then spring of my senior year, I was in a musical that traveled to several Eastern cities, including Philly. I contacted my secret passion, desperate to see her. We arranged to have drinks and then to have her come to the show. That afternoon, with some other cast members, we went to see the great comedy Some Like It Hot with Marilyn Monroe, Jack Lemmon and Tony Curtis. At the end of the movie, Lemmon, in drag, is off on a speedboat with Joe E. Brown, playing an elderly millionaire in love with Lemmon, thinking he's a woman. Lemmon protests the marriage will never work for various reasons. Brown keeps saying that it doesn't matter, he's in love. Finally, Lemmon whips off his wig and announces, "I'm a man." The old millionaire cuddles even closer and delivers the film's last line: "Well, nobody's perfect."

My glamorous tan waitress showed up later for a drink. I didn't recognize her, pasty and pale and heavier by many pounds. In shock, I just shook her hand and muttered, "You're not tan." She smiled at me, squeezing my hand back.

"Nobody's perfect," she said. ✖✖✖

5 FINAL FINALS THOUGHTS

It's the Truth... With about a minute left in Game 6, we snapped a photo of the retired numbers up in the rafters and sent out this text: "Coming soon... #34." Paul Pierce now officially lives on the Mount Olympus of Boston sports. He's up there hitting on chicks with Brady, slugging beers with Yaz and getting stoned with the Chief. Welcome home, PP.

Perk and the Point... The two biggest question marks heading into this season (aside from the rhetorical: Did we seriously trade for Kevin Garnett? REALLY?) were Rajon Rondo and Kendrick Perkins. In the afterglow of the finals, both of those question marks are now exclamation points—maybe nine exclamation points in Rondo's case. They entered the year as unproven talents and finished it as pros. And it only gets better from here.

Old Man Winner... When we heard that PJ Brown had signed with the C's back in February, we thought it was a joke. Now PJ's the one laughing (and we imagine doing so with the same raspy voice that our grandfather had). Not only did Brown assume an irreplaceable role off the bench, but because of the low expectations, each of his contributions delivered that "Oh sweet, I just found a $20 bill in my pocket" feeling. It was totally unexpected and always uplifting.

3 "NO ONE WILL EVER AGAIN..."S

Compare Kobe to MJ... Unless Jordan gets accused of raping somebody, this comparison is dead. Personally, we thought Kobe had it in him. Maybe he wouldn't surpass Michael, but he'd at least be in the conversation. Well... conversation over. But hey, it wasn't all bad for the Mamba. He also managed to solidify his spot as one of the most detestable sports-related human beings of the 21st century.

Question KG's Clutchness... With his 26-point, 14-rebound performance in the clincher, all of Garnett's detractors can give it a rest. But more important, so can KG. You know his crunch-time struggles were wearing on him, and having that choke artist label removed from his résumé is going to bring the Big Ticket to a level of peace that's eluded him for a while. Serious question, though: What the hell's Shaugnessy going to write about during Celtics season now? Must... drum up... controversy!

Call for Doc's Head... Doc Rivers is no longer just the coach of the Celtics. He is Celtics family. Like any family, Doc and Celtics Nation will certainly continue to have their differences, but any criticisms will be delivered in a different tone, from a different place. He's one of us now. He's a Celtic. He's Uncle Doc—the godson of great, great crazy grandfather Tommy.

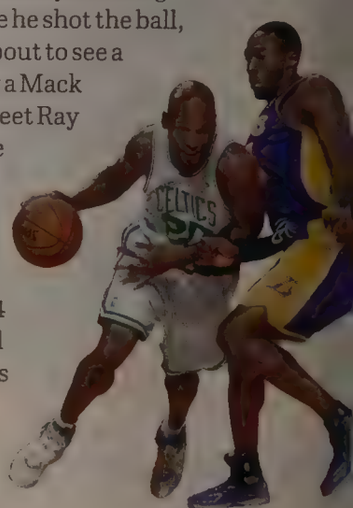
4 Lasting Memories

Danny's Boys... The image of Danny Ainge and the PGA Tour hugging it out on the C's bench is going to stick with us for a while. Maybe this is an awkward analogy, but did the scene remind anyone else of Charlie's Angels—with Danny playing Charlie, the guy who brought everyone together to pull off a big job and lurked around quietly in the background until the deed was done? (Just to stretch it a little further: KG is Cameron Diaz, Ray Allen is Lucy Liu and Pierce is Drew Barrymore... think about it).

You's My Vujabitch... There wasn't a better guy to root for this year than Ray Allen, a fact that made watching the first few rounds of the playoffs utterly frustrating (at one point we started instinctively covering our eyes every time he shot the ball, like we were about to see a biker get hit by a Mack truck). But Sweet Ray returned in the Finals, and that move he put on Sasha Vujacic to seal the Game 4 comeback will forever serve as the defining moment of Allen's championship season.



Doc Gets Gatored... Can we confirm that Game 6 marked the first Gatorading of a coach in NBA history? Either way, props to the cameraman who snuck in for that unforgettable "view from the floor" shot. Either that scene was staged or the guy delivered the best piece of clandestine camerawork we've seen since Rick Salomon.

Na-Na-Na-Na... We've always considered the "Hey Hey Hey, Goodbyyyyye" chant at sporting events a little played out, but the one the Garden crowd dropped on the Lakers was for the ages. For the fans, it was the most celebratory and unifying moment of the season, and for the national audience, a reminder that no matter how much you hate Boston fans, you can't deny our passion.

House Party 2... Between Eddie House and his son-turned-team-mascot Jaelen, the Houses were the MVP family of the postseason. (Aside from the Grousbecks. Is it us, or does Wyc look more like the second coming of Robert Kraft with every passing day?) House has earned himself a lifelong pass in Boston. For the rest of his career—no matter who he's playing for—he'll be treated like royalty any time he's at the Garden (especially if he's on the Kings... rim shot).

Wait, Did I Leave It at Scal's Place?... We weren't opposed to seeing Scot Pollard change into his uniform—after spending most of the season in a suit—for the post-Finals celebration; we were just surprised he could find it. Can't you imagine him running around his apartment before heading to the Garden like, "Shit, it's been four months, where the eff did I put that thing?" (And yeah, we know NBA players don't really bring their uniforms home.)

2 SUMMER ASSIGNMENTS

Ring Around the Posey... James Posey is like the [illegible]. Life was OK before the Web, but now we can't imagine living without it. Can a guy who averages only 14 minutes, seven points and four rebounds a game really make that much of a difference? We now know that he can. So while Big Green Danny certainly earned the right to test the free agency market this summer, Celtics management hopefully won't let this trade fall into the wrong hands.

This Defense Can't Rest... In 13 games against the two greatest basketball players in the world—Kobe and LeBron—the Celtics lost convincingly by a total of two. What defensive guru Tom Thibodeau accomplished in those matchups won't be overstated. He did the impossible. He out-smarted Stephen Hawking and Bill Gates to outsmart Stephen A. Smith and Curt Schilling, and next season the latter will not be anywhere else but on the Celtics' bench.

ONE LAST SHOT

What a whirlwind year for Celtics Nation. It's not like winning is anything new in Boston, but with the Spygate scandal surrounding the Pats, and the Red Sox' big-market advantage and steroid questions constantly hovering over Fenway, rooting for the Celtics these last 116 games was one of the purest and most enjoyable forms of fandom we've had around here since 2004. One through 12, the Celtics had one of the most likable rosters in team history, and regardless of what happens from here on out, the 2008 squad made anyone who suffered with the C's over the last 20-something years more than happy they stuck around.

"I was the Warren Buffett of the writer's block commodities market."

Soroff On JUNOT DÍAZ

The Pulitzer Prize winner on writer's block, white people and eating Gabriel García Márquez

MIT associate professor Junot Díaz, 39, was born in the Dominican Republic and moved to the United States at age 6. His debut collection of short stories, Drown, garnered him universal acclaim at 27 years old. It took Díaz more than a decade to finish his follow-up, The Brief Wondrous Life of Oscar Wao, but it was worth the wait: The novel earned the 2008 Pulitzer Prize for fiction. The recipient of countless other accolades including a Guggenheim Fellowship, he's Boston Review's fiction editor and a founding member of the Voices of Our Nations Arts Foundation writing workshop. His stories have appeared in The New Yorker and The Paris Review, among other publications. He lives in Cambridge.

Jonathan Soroff: You're awfully young for such tremendous success. Ever worry that you'll be a one-hit wonder like Bret Easton Ellis?

Junot Díaz: Shit, if I'm young and successful, just imagine how Zadie Smith feels. But, hey—I'm glad that I got the love that I've gotten. As for being a one-hit wonder, now that the novel is out, I get to worry about being a two-hit wonder.

How weird was it when you arrived here at age 6 from Santo Domingo?
About as weird as time-travel or being transported between dimensions.

What was the hardest part of the transition?
Oh, just having to learn an entirely new world. But more specifically, arriving a few months before the fall of Saigon, which meant that one of the first words I learned in English was "Vietnam."

Your father was already living here. What was the effect of being separated and then reunited?
I think I've spent my whole life trying to answer that question. What was nutty was: In my family, there was a willful erasure of the separation. When we were reunited, we (the kids) were all supposed to pretend that we'd known him forever, that we'd never been apart, and that psychic charade wreaked havoc on us, I think.

You love Planet of the Apes. Which movie was your favorite and why the strong affinity?
The original Planet of the Apes, and Conquest of the Planet of the Apes. Why I love these movies so deeply is explained in Eric Greene's book Planet of the Apes as American Myth, or by the wildness of that one line from the first movie: "Ape does not kill ape."

PHOTOGRAPH BY Bill Wadman

The New Yorker has already anointed you as one of the top 20 writers of the 21st century. Does that feel premature?
They had to name somebody. I guess they figured that George Bush would have blown the planet up before anybody had a chance to notice what a joke these kinds of lists are.

Writing is such a solitary pursuit. Do you crave the vacuum aspect of the craft?
Nope. I love to hang out and go out dancing. When I want to be alone, I read. Writing is the thing I wish I didn't have to do, and yet no matter how much I resist it always pulls me back. Like a really fed-up old friend with a huge bag of coke.

What's your writing routine?
I write early in the morning for about three or four hours, and then I go read something beautiful.

Ever had writer's block?
I cornered the market on that shit. I was the Warren Buffett of the writer's block commodities market.

Single most important quality a writer can have?
An incredible tolerance for being utterly irrelevant.

What one thing about the States makes you most feel like an immigrant?
White people.

You wear architect's glasses. Do you consider yourself a type of architect?
Only in the Masonic sense. I secretly believe that I am descended from the Dionysian Architects.

Aren't glasses AND a goatee a bold fashion statement?
Ha. If I had a more manly chin, I wouldn't need a goatee, and if I had the eyes of Horus, I wouldn't need the specs, either. I'd be a god.

One piece of advice you'd offer an aspiring writer?
Tell publishers that you were homeless or raised by Crips—never mind that you actually went to an elite college. They love that shit.

Three books you'd take to a deserted island.
Beloved, because it's the one book about the American experience that gets it all right. Akira, because it's the greatest science fiction story ever told and because no one blows shit up like Katsuhiro Otomo. And The God of Small Things, because I love love stories.

Who or what was your greatest teacher?
Cue the violins. My mother. In a truly just world, she'd be here doing this interview, and not me. She's in every woman I've ever written and behind every bit of courage I've ever mustered.

In your private life, do you speak Spanish, English or Spanglish the most?
I speak mostly Spanish with my girl and my family and English with my second-generation Dominican boys.

Whom do you prefer: Gabriel García Márquez or Mario Vargas Llosa?
As an appetizer? I'd rather cannibalize a leftist like García Márquez; right-wing nuts like Vargas Llosa seem to be heavy in carbs.

Do you think you're viewed as a sexy nerd?
I've always been the ugliest guy in the room. This is a question that makes me feel foolish.

Do you feel that good science fiction is wishful thinking or prescience?
It's neither for me. It's a way of telling about the now in a manner that sidesteps all our built-in resistances to talking about the now.

The biggest way in which your kids' lives will differ from yours?
Their father will not hit them. He will not leave them. He will not call them faggots.

Last question: Now that you've won the Pulitzer, isn't it time to retire?
No! Now is the time to write half-assed books with a quickness and scoop up some fast advance money! ✖✖✖

Excerpts from "Alma"

You have a girlfriend named Alma, WHO HAS A LONG TENDER HORSE NECK AND A big Dominican ass that seems to exist in a fourth dimension beyond jeans. AN ASS THAT COULD DRAG THE MOON OUT OF ORBIT. An ass she never liked until she met you. AIN'T A DAY THAT PASSES THAT YOU DON'T want to press your face against that ass or bite the delicate sliding tendons of her neck. YOU LOVE HOW SHE SHIVERS WHEN YOU BITE, how she fights you with those arms that are so skinny they belong on an after-school special.

SHE IS IN A PAINTING PHASE, AND THE PEOPLE SHE PAINTS ARE ALL THE COLOR OF MOLD, look like they've just been dredged from the bottom of a lake. HER LAST PAINTING WAS OF YOU, SLOUCHING AGAINST THE FRONT DOOR: ONLY YOUR FROWNING I-HAD-A-LOUSY-THIRD-WORLD-CHILDHOOD-AND-ALL-I-GOT-WAS-THIS-ATTITUDE EYES RECOGNIZABLE. She did give you one huge forearm. I told you I'd get the muscles in. THE PAST COUPLE OF WEEKS, now that the warm is here, ALMA HAS ABANDONED BLACK, STARTED WEARING THESE NOTHING DRESSES MADE OUT OF WHAT FEELS LIKE TISSUE PAPER; it wouldn't take more than a strong wind to undress her.

Alma is slender as a reed, you a steroid-addicted block; Alma loves driving, you books; ALMA OWNS A SATURN (BOUGHT FOR HER BY HER CARPENTER FATHER, WHO SPEAKS ONLY ENGLISH IN THE HOUSE), YOU HAVE NO POINTS ON YOUR LICENSE; ALMA'S NAILS ARE TOO DIRTY FOR COOKING, YOUR SPAGHETTI CON POLLO IS THE BEST IN THE LAND. You are so very different—she rolls her eyes every time you turn on the news and says she can't "stand" politics. SHE WON'T EVEN CALL HERSELF HISPANIC. SHE BRAGS TO HER GIRLS THAT YOU'RE A "RADICAL" AND A REAL DOMINICAN (EVEN THOUGH ON THE PLÁTANO INDEX YOU WOULDN'T RANK, ALMA BEING ONLY THE THIRD LATINA YOU'VE EVER REALLY DATED). You brag to your boys that she has more albums than any of them do, THAT SHE SAYS TERRIBLE WHITE-GIRL THINGS WHILE YOU FUCK. She's more adventurous in bed than any girl you've had...

Yes—IT'S AN OPPOSITES-ATTRACT SORT OF THING, it's a great-sex sort of thing, IT'S A NO-THINKING SORT OF THING. It's wonderful! Wonderful! UNTIL ONE JUNE DAY ALMA DISCOVERS THAT YOU ARE ALSO FUCKING THIS BEAUTIFUL FRESHMAN GIRL NAMED LAXMI, DISCOVERS THE FUCKING OF LAXMI BECAUSE SHE, Alma, the girlfriend, opens your journal AND READS. (OH, SHE HAD HER SUSPICIONS.) She waits for you on the stoop, AND WHEN YOU PULL UP IN HER SATURN AND NOTICE THE JOURNAL IN HER HAND your heart plunges through you like a fat bandit through a hangman's trap. YOU TAKE YOUR TIME TURNING OFF THE CAR. You are overwhelmed by a pelagic sadness. Sadness at being caught, AT THE INCONTROVERTIBLE KNOWLEDGE THAT SHE WILL NEVER FORGIVE YOU.

Condomland

Pulling back the wrapper on rubbers

BY Jonathan Soroff PHOTOGRAPHS BY Dave Bradley

In days of old, when knights were bold,
And condoms weren't invented,
They'd tie it up, inside a cup,
Thus, babies were prevented.

THAT AND ANY NUMBER OF (mostly filthier) versions of the same limerick have been recited in schoolyards since Hector was a pup, but what's shocking is that until recently, the dirtiest word in that rhyme was "condom."

Obviously, HIV and AIDS education has helped to change that taboo. Yet long after everything else related to sex has become acceptable brunch conversation—with Candace Bushnell and Sarah Jessica Parker not only having sex in the city but having it in orifices their mothers' generation wouldn't have acknowledged—"condom" remains synonymous with "coitus interruptus."

A necessary evil? Yup.

A good idea? Definitely.

But hot? Not so much.

Combating that attitude has been the life's work of Davin Wedel, the founder and president of Global Protection. Wedel is the Willy Wonka of willy-coverings, and his company is based, surprisingly enough, in the South Boston waterfront. In a city famous for its prudery, in an Irish-Catholic part of town where the Pope's word on these things is at least putatively taken seriously, a condom company has been pumping out little latex calamari for the past 11 years.

Although industry giants Trojan and Lifestyles/Durex make up about 98 percent of the overall market, Global has a 20-to-30 percent share for distributing different brands to health clinics and medical facilities, while its own label, One, has helped make the rubber at least marginally sexier. With clever, eye-catching packaging and such savvy marketing tools as an online competition to design one of their foils (which depict romantic scenes or items like a tennis ball alongside the quote "One, Love"), One has also achieved prominent product placement on such part-of-the-zeitgeist TV shows as Meet the Kardashians, Real World and My Life on the D-List. Their celebrity endorser, meanwhile, is street ball star Troy "Escalade" Jackson (who lost his older brother to AIDS).

Last year, Global's sales hit $5.5 million, and they recently managed to crack the tough retail market, becoming one of the more popular brands sold by Canadian pharmacy giant Shoppers Drug Mart. (Incidentally, Wal-Mart is the largest purveyor in this country.) Every day, Global's South Boston facility packages 40,000 rubbers. (Worldwide, an estimated 13 to 14 billion condoms are made annually.) More impressively, Wedel is the inventor of the glow-in-the-dark rubber. He also sells the Pleasure Plus—a revolutionary design with extra room at the tip to allow for more sensation. (There are no immediate plans for an Everlasting Gobstopper, but one can only hope.)

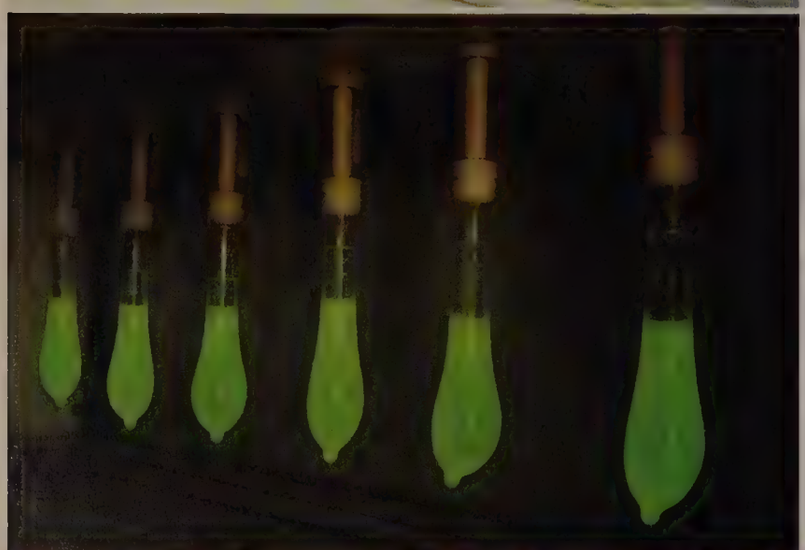
OK, you say. That's interesting, but condoms still aren't sexy. True—especially when fumbling is involved, at which point the person on the receiving end is usually fumbling around for the remote control. This has always been a chief complaint about rubbers—just rent any teen-angst sex comedy—but even among experienced lovers who can sheath it while no one's looking, condoms have never been a big part of Cupid's arsenal.



Such accomplished swordsmen as Casanova and the Marquis de Sade acknowledged their usefulness while bemoaning their deadening effect. In short, a rubber is like a rich, annoying uncle; you're glad you have one but can't stand having him around.

No matter. The need has always been there. The first-known condoms go back as far as the ancient Egyptians, who used extremely fine linen, which, as birth control, must have been a disappointment. But it's not at all clear that birth control was what they had in mind. In fact, in all the conflicting accounts of their origin, which is murky at best, their purpose seems unilaterally skewed toward the prevention of STDs rather than pregnancy—a sad fact, given that they're proven to prevent the spread of disease and yet some studies claim that the biggest users are married couples who don't want to conceive.

Crude sheaths of linen, leather, animal intestine and other materials are well documented throughout history (even in cave paintings), but the etymology of the word "condom" is almost comically shrouded in uncertainty. Some claim it derives from the Latin "condon," meaning a receptacle, while English folklore credits a Dr. Quondam or Condom (later elevated to the Earl of Condom) with its invention. Supposedly ennobled by Charles II for stemming the tide of venereal disease in Restoration England, he makes for a good story but is probably apocryphal, there being no evidence that such a person ever actually existed. (For what it's worth, though, Charles II admitted to siring at least a dozen illegitimate offspring, so if he was using condoms, contraception seems to have been low on his list of priorities.) Of course, as in all things sex-related, the French have staked their claim, pointing toward the town of Condom in Gascony (home to that literary smoothie Cyrano de Bergerac). Meanwhile, true to form, the Japanese ceremonialized their condoms into two kinds: the Kawagata or Kyotai, made of thin leather, and the Kabutogata, made of tortoiseshell or horn.

The Oxford English Dictionary sums it up succinctly: "Origin unknown," but the earliest written reference is from the 16th-century Italian physician Gabriele Falloppio (of fallopian-tube fame), who clearly thought of condoms as a tool for public health rather than a contraceptive, which probably explains why it wasn't until several centuries later that the Vatican officially got its knickers in a twist over them.

This distinction between disease and pregnancy prevention leads us back to Wedel, a gay man who started his business as a sophomore at Tufts University. In 1987, surgeon general C. Everett Koop created a tempest in the teapot of Ronald Reagan's administration by suggesting that condom use could prevent the spread of the then-mysterious AIDS virus. Seeing a chance to do well by doing good, Wedel was inspired to package condoms in matchbooks bearing Jumbo, the university's elephant mascot, alongside the slogan "A Safe Jumbo Is a Happy Jumbo." The concept took off, and soon he was designing different matchbooks, which led inevitably to other novelty items—lollipop-shaped condoms and condom key-chains—which evolved into the company he runs today.

The first-known condoms go back as far as the ancient Egyptians, who used extremely fine linen, which, as birth control, must have been a disappointment

While the rubbers themselves are manufactured overseas (mostly in Malaysia), the South Boston facility does product testing and packaging. Every latex condom is examined for holes with an electrical current. If it passes, it's rolled and packaged. A portion of each batch is also subjected to water leak and air-burst testing. Wedel can quote the federal standards with tedious accuracy, and his liability insurance, he says, is considerable.

It's interesting to note, though, that the product itself is made in Asia. In 2006, the Indian Council of Medical Research published a study stating that men from the Indian sub-continent have, on average, smaller penises, and therefore there's a greater risk of condoms slipping off. That said, Japan has the world's highest rate of condom usage, and the Japanese are skilled enough at putting them on that they have access to a super-thin latex variety that has proven unmarketable elsewhere in the world. (Apparently, the rest of us are either in a rush, clumsy, drunk or some combination thereof.)

Our forefathers would undoubtedly be appalled to know that such an enterprise as Global Protection is thriving in the cradle of Puritanism. There don't seem to be any antediluvian Blue Laws—which govern everything from when you can mow your lawn to what sexual position you can engage in with your wife—related to condom usage in Massachusetts. However, as recently as 2004, the Holyoke school system took a ration of grief from the archdiocese of Springfield for making condoms available to sixth through 12th graders, and similar uproars have erupted around the state. It wasn't until 1936, furthermore—when the Supreme Court lifted the 1873 anti-contraception law known as the Comstock Act—that the sale or use of condoms even became legal in the United States. It was good timing, though.

The long road from sheep's intestines to electrically tested latex ("ribbed for her pleasure" and otherwise) reached a watershed in the 1930s, but the whole thing would have been impossible without a man more widely associated with tires. In 1844, Charles Goodyear patented the vulcanization process, and 10 years later, the first true rubbers were manufactured: thick, seamed, unwieldy and—perhaps most disgusting—reusable. (What they washed them with, and how, is better left uncontemplated.) Then, in 1912, a German named Fromm (still a popular brand of condom in that country) refined the process by creating thinner, seamless prophylactics, and the advent of liquid latex in the 1930s allowed for what are basically the condoms we use today.

So how many of us are actually using them? Statistics are hard to come by. However, the Massachusetts Department of Health conducted a survey reporting that out of 1,985 sexually active respondents ages 18 to 64, 24 percent said they used a condom during their last amorous encounter. Whether or not they're using them correctly or responsibly is another matter. As for nontraditional uses, Wedel relates that a toilet manufacturer once requested a batch of rubbers to fill with soybeans—essentially as turd decoys to test its equipment. Live performers routinely put them on microphone battery packs, so that they don't get a jolt when their sweat creates an electrical current. Condoms also can prevent rifle barrels from clogging.

Many would argue that those are all better uses than for sex, echoing the sarcastic 16th-century French marquis who called them "a bulwark against pleasure, but a cobweb against danger." (Clearly, the infection aspect has been improved dramatically.) But strides are being made to advance condoms, with the creation of a polyurethane version (a boon to the millions of people allergic to latex), while an ultra-sensitive, spray-on form is in development. Until they hit the market, Wedel will keep producing latex condoms at his South Boston facility, which, as one visitor noted, is "probably the only place in Boston where you can see an open condom lying on the floor and not be thoroughly grossed out." ✖✖✖

ABSENCE of PHALLUS

A look inside Harvard University's chastity club

JUDGED SOLELY BY MEDIA COVERAGE of its extracurricular organizations, Harvard University might give the impression of being a big bastion of sexuality. There's H-Bomb, the school's official sex magazine, which made headlines on CNN and in London's Guardian when it launched in 2004. There's Sex and the Ivy, student Lena Chen's explicit online diary, which has been cited in Newsweek and is notorious enough that a New York production company recently approached her about turning it into a TV show. And then there's True Love Revolution, a student-run organization dedicated solely to the promotion of premarital abstinence.

Founded in 2006 by then-students Sarah Kinsella and Justin Murray, the True Love Revolution (TLR, not to be confused with TRL) spreads its wait-for-marriage message via ice cream socials, community dinners and an annual Valentine's Day mailing to Harvard freshmen—stressing the short but controversial notion, "You're worth the wait."

"The official position of TLR is that we applaud every step in the direction of taking sex, relationships and people more seriously," says Janie Fredell, a member and former copresident of the group. "We definitely think that if one chooses to be sexually active prior to marriage, the fewer sexual partners the better, for obvious health and emotional reasons. However, we also firmly believe in the merits of waiting until marriage to have sex. Sex entails a great commitment—one that can only be satisfied in its entirety after two people promise themselves to one another, before their family and friends, for better or for worse, etcetera, etcetera. This is the only way that sexuality can be brought to full flower... to bond two people together who have already established compatibility on emotional, intellectual and spiritual levels, in order to fortify them against all of the challenges that they will tackle together."

Last year, TLR members showed up at freshman orientation to distribute a flyer entitled "10 Reasons to Wait." The distribution corresponded with an event called "Sex Signals," a school-sponsored date rape–education program for matriculating students. While Sex Signals in particular is about the right to say no, the students of TLR felt that the sex-ed programs at Harvard treated drunken make-out sessions too cavalierly, reflecting the overall attitude of the student body.

"The event was very flamboyant, with skits of people hooking up and what that entailed," says Rachel Wagley, who joined TLR shortly after starting Harvard in the fall of 2007. "The skits presented Harvard as a place where hookups are abundant. I think [TLR's] intention is to show that there is an alternative, that there's a whole other lifestyle."

TLR garnered much attention in March 2008, when The New York Times Magazine ran a lengthy feature on the group. The blogosphere had a field day with the article, focusing largely on the then-presidents of the organization, undergrads Fredell and Leo Keliher; both are staunch Catholics, although TLR aims to be a secular organization. ("Did he import a 12C monastery to sleep in?" said the snarky, Ivy League–focused blog IvyGate, regarding a photo of Keliher in his sparse dorm room.)

Subsequently, at the end of the 2007-08 school year, Fredell and Keliher handed the TLR reins over to two lesser-known students. "I did not stay on as copresident because I think that repeat leadership poses a threat to new organizations. [There is a] tendency for [the group] to become based upon the personality of one or two people, especially poignant considering the volume of press Leo and I got," says the media-savvy Fredell, who will be a senior next year; she is considering a career on Capitol Hill. "The two of us have been interviewed and caricatured in many different venues, both on campus and in the national media."

TLR's two new copresidents are Wagley, the daughter of a Lutheran pastor, and Mauricio Artavia, who will come back in the fall as a junior. "TLR will continue to grow after I graduate, after Leo graduates, after Rachel and Mauricio graduate and beyond," Fredell says.

"The official position of TLR is that we applaud every step in the direction of taking sex, relationships and people more seriously."

The revolution's roots

Like Fredell and Keliher, Wagley and Artavia are attractive—which is to say that nobody could snark that they're abstinent by default. Wagley, a native of Washington, says the college hookup scene was, if not a surprise, at least a culture shock. "I'm from Spokane, which is relatively conservative, so it's a lot different from high school," she says. "Boston is a lot more liberal than home."

As for Artavia, who with a dark pageboy haircut looks less conventionally conservative than his copresident: "I'm from Miami," he says, wryly, when asked whether he comes from a sheltered environment. "Does that explain it?" He further explains that sexually active kids in his high school actually wore those infamous bracelets you've heard about—multicolored jelly jewelry, each hue signifying a sexual activity the wearer is willing to perform. (The idea is that a person who breaks a bracelet off the wearer's arm is entitled to receive the corresponding sex act.) But until he was 12, Artavia lived in Costa Rica, a country he describes as "even more conservative than Spokane."

Artavia developed his convictions about sex when he was young, he says, and moving to a liberal environment only strengthened them. He's Catholic, but strongly stresses TLR's intent to remain secular. "We don't need to rely on religion to promote abstinence," he says. By the same token, TLR differs from similar groups at other elite colleges in that it doesn't advocate for anything other than abstinence. The Anscombe Society, with chapters at Princeton and MIT, takes a definite stance against gay marriage. (TLR doesn't take a stance on homosexuality at all, although some critics argue that a group so focused on the goal of marriage should advocate for all marriage.)

Absent of religion, TLR simply wants to warn fellow students against casual sex, Artavia says. For those who are in monogamous relationships, the group wants to let them know that they can fill their time together with other activities. The gist of the argument is that if there's sex in a premarital relationship, the sex will cloud the other aspects of that relationship. "People say, 'But what if I'm in love?'" Wagley explains. "Even if you are in love, you should realize that they're worth the wait, and so are you."

"People are under the assumption that sex is fundamental for a relationship," continues Artavia. "At the end of the day, if you really are in love with someone, this is not the way love is proven." He isn't in a relationship right now, but if he does meet someone, "my girlfriend will always know I'm with her solely for her," he says.

Asked how he can make definitive statements about sex if he hasn't had sex yet, he replies, "It's just like if the government advises you not to murder someone, it's still good advice even if that government official has never shot anyone," Artavia says. "I don't think you have to hit rock bottom to know that hitting rock bottom is bad."

"Not that we're equating having sex with murdering someone!" Wagley hastens to add. For her part, she says remaining abstinent helps her focus on schoolwork and extracurricular activities. College is complicated enough, she says, and she wants to make the most of a Harvard education. "I don't want my life at college to be about hooking up with people, and I don't want to enter into an intense emotional relationship right now."

Sex and the Ivy's Chen, who will be a senior next year, argues that sex isn't necessarily a detriment to academics. In her California high school, "I was the biggest, drunkest slut in the [Advanced Placement] program, and the only one who got into Harvard," she says. But Chen concedes that college students tend to be sex-obsessed. "In high school, some of the kids were having sex, but it wasn't a big deal," she says. "It wasn't like in college, where if you're sexually active but not having sex, you're spending all your time thinking about how you're not having it." Even her virginal friends talk a lot about "hooking up," she says.

The students of TLR felt that the sex-ed programs at Harvard treated drunken make-out sessions too cavalierly.

Desire and ire

The students of TLR receive a fair amount of ribbing about chastity, although Wagley says, "It's all in good fun." The press has fun with it, too. The New Yorker recently ran a cartoon in which a young, preppy man sits cross-legged in an armchair, murmuring into a landline phone: "Oh baby, then we go on our 17th date and I grab your hand—but then I let go because I don't want to rush things and anyway our strawberry milkshakes have arrived." The cartoon's caption: "Phone Waiting-for-Marriage."

When the National Public Radio show "Wait, Wait, Don't Tell Me" recently reported that K-Mart is now selling abstinence pants for girls (they say "True Love Waits" on the butt), the show's host was laughing.

And when he was in Boston during his latest book tour, writer David Sedaris scoffed at the idea of a college abstinence club. "When I go to a high school or a college I tell the kids they should be having as much sex as possible," he said. "To have an abstinence club when you're 19, it's ridiculous. When you're old and masturbating alone, you have nothing good to look back on other than the sex you had when you were young."

Maybe it's because abstinence clubs exist in the first place, but chastity is an easy target for both humor and ire, and it's easy to understand why like-minded students would want to band together. But their critics wish they would keep their message to themselves.

There are some 200 students on Harvard's TLR e-mail list and about 350 members in the TLR-Global Facebook group. Some are more serious about the cause than others. ("Does it count if I'm abstinent if no one will have sex with me?" reads a Facebook message. "I'm totally willing to be a part of this until I can get laid.") Some are more curious than abstinent. ("I know a guy who definitely is not abstinent, but he wants to learn about what we're doing, and that's valuable, too," Wagley says.) Some might be in it for the apparel. (For $8 you can buy a T-shirt that reads "Liberté, Égalité, Chasteté." Shirts are available on the group's Web site.) But for a fairly young organization, the growth is impressive. And there have been growing pains along the way.

TLR sparked ire on Valentine's Day 2007, when the group sent valentines to all the women in the freshman class with a message that read, "Why wait? Because you're worth it."

"They gave all the women freshmen valentines, and none of the men," recalls Martabel Wasserman, current editor of H-Bomb magazine, who was in that year's incoming class. "It was very heteronormative."

In 2008, TLR sent valentines to all the freshmen, men and women. In tandem, the group ran an ad for chastity in The Harvard Crimson, cosponsored with the abstinence group at Princeton. Keliher says that limiting the mailings to women the first year was mostly a budgetary matter: The group had a larger budget this year and could afford a larger audience. "People read all sorts of things into the message that weren't there," Keliher says. "What we meant was that every person is worth waiting for."

But the use of the word "worth" is exactly what rubs some students the wrong way—the implication that premarital sex lowers a person's self-worth. "Having sex doesn't make you a bad person," says Sex and the Ivy's Chen. She adds that in spite of her reputation as Harvard's resident sexpot, almost half her friends at school are still virgins—they're just not TLR virgins.

And many students say that while they respect the choice to remain abstinent, they don't like being told what to do by a group dedicated to the cause. "I think they have the right to exist," Chen says of TRL. "It just doesn't make sense to me.... I would never tell one of my friends who is abstinent to go have sex."

But isn't advocating for personal causes par for the course among all college students, what with their endless energy and unsullied ideals? Not really, says H-Bomb's Wasserman, in spite of the media's attempts to show otherwise. "Last year news trucks showed up on campus because all these kids were running around screaming, and the media thought it was an anti-war protest; but it was just that everyone was excited because it was housing day, and they were going to find out what houses they were in next year," she says. "I'd say generally students here are apathetic. And of groups that are in your face about their causes, True Love Revolution is disproportionably up there."

And Fredell, while agreeing sex should be a private matter among married couples, felt obligated to go public about abstinence. "I really believe in something that a whole culture seems to have blinded itself to," Fredell says. "I would not want to look in the mirror at the woman who kept the beauty of premarital abstinence all to herself."

The TLR students maintain that they're not out to issue orders to anyone. "We never tell them what they should choose," Artavia says. "We tell them that this is what we have chosen. We've never told anyone that they should abide by these perspectives. 'Sharing' is a good word for what we're doing. We're offering an alternative."

H-Bomb's Wasserman disagrees. "By putting flyers in people's mailboxes they're saying it's the way to be, not just a way to be," she says.

Wasserman does agree with TLR that the sex-education program at freshman orientation is insufficient, just not for the same reasons; she thinks students need refresher courses throughout college. She maintains that there are many clubs at Harvard that foster delusions of grandeur among certain students, which, combined with the naiveté of other students, can lead to trouble. At Harvard, it's common knowledge that the shuttle bus between Harvard and Wellesley College is known as "The F Truck," and that there are plenty of Harvard guys who make a point of meeting women who will be impressed by their school.

"These clubs are really elite and exclusive, and what I've seen in those environments is that people have a sense of entitlement. I've seen men treating women really badly and women not realizing they're being treated badly.... We have all these advisors for academics, but not for our social lives. It's really confusing when you get to college. And there are a lot of people at Harvard who haven't been sexual before because they're, like, nerds. And they need to be able to talk about things in an open and nuanced way." (Wasserman says that H-Bomb invited TLR to contribute a piece to the last issue of the magazine, in order to provide a unique viewpoint, but the group declined.)

"[Sexual education] is really important, but it's not something that's a one-time conversation," Wasserman says. "I can't tell you how many of my friends have been sexually assaulted while at college."

Chen, who at 20 is already famous for her sexual savvy, admits that even she found herself in uncomfortable situations her first year at Harvard. "In my experience, some guys have behaved really inappropriately," Chen says. "And when I was a freshman, I wasn't always assertive enough." She recalls a man who claimed he wanted only friendship but kept pushing the envelope—inviting her to his dorm room "just to hang out" and ending up on top of her. "I got out of there," she says. "But it shouldn't have taken me half an hour."

But both Chen and Wasserman favor open discussion over avoidance. In addition to editing the school's sex magazine, Wasserman helps organize the annual female orgasm seminar. (Chen attended the event with her boyfriend, Patrick Hamm, a 28-year-old sociology grad student at Harvard.) "If you want to have sex, it shouldn't be a scary thing," Wasserman says.

"There are a lot of people at Harvard who haven't been sexual before because they're, like, nerds," says Wasserman.

Scare tactics

Indeed, many of the arguments for abstinence among TLR seem to be based on the idea that choosing chastity means avoiding pain. "People who abstain from sexual activity do not have to worry about STDs, unplanned pregnancies, or the possibility that their partner is 'just in it for the sex,'" reads one of the opening lines on the FAQ page of the group's Web site. "Saving sex for marriage lowers your chances of divorce and marital infidelity while enabling better sex in your future marriage, free from regrets and unwanted memories of past sexual experiences." (The statements on the site are generally footnoted and attributed to articles in the Journal of Family Issues and Journal of Marriage and Family, among other publications.)

"Early sexual activity and having multiple sexual partners is strongly associated with increased depression, greater likelihood of maternal poverty, and higher rates of marital infidelity and divorce in future marriages," the site goes on to say. "Sexual activity in both men and women involves the release of powerful bonding hormones that are designed to help married couples stay together permanently and trust each other. Within marriage, these bonds are a cause of joy and marital harmony; but for non-married couples, such bonds can cause serious problems. When these relationships come to an end, the partners often feel a palpable sense of loss, betrayed trust, and unwelcome memories. This is information that you will rarely hear from sexual health groups that promote safe sex, because 'there is no condom for the heart.'"

The Valentine's Day ad in The Crimson warned about oxytocin, a chemical released during orgasm (and during prolonged cuddling, according to some studies), which has been shown to produce chemically based feelings of affection. It's known as "the bonding hormone." (Says Sedaris on the dangers of bonding during premarital sex: "Not if you have sex with someone you don't like, and that's the best sex to have!")

"This means that there is no such thing as casual sex," the ad read. "No matter how much people may desire to easily detach themselves or forget about the sexual intimacy they shared with another person, they are physiologically bonded to that person. This is why so many people, young women especially, feel abandoned, used and empty when they get the sex without the personal commitment."

Chen has been used. Last winter, shortly after a public debate in which she and Fredell argued about sex, an unstable 35-year-old ex-boyfriend of Chen's put naked pictures of her on the Web, without her permission. The photos garnered a lot of attention because Chen was already known for her sex life, although she had never posted nude photos of herself. It shook her up enough that she stopped posting to Sex and the Ivy for months, and she started a new blog called The Chicktionary in which she could write about something other than sex. But that doesn't mean she regrets writing about sex—or having it.

"The thing about the whole photo thing was that even though it was devastating, I recovered pretty quickly," says Chen. "I think heartache is a part of life, even [if you choose to remain abstinent]. And you can get hurt by people even without fing them."

Even Fredell agrees with that. "I have dated a few guys who thought they could change my mind about abstinence," she says. "The guys who were 'easy to spot' and who I got involved with anyways, I didn't have a problem dating casually, knowing that nothing serious would materialize.

"Real pain was learning to deal with guys I didn't spot, and got into serious relationships with, in which sex didn't come into question until farther down the road. In these cases, it was hard but necessary to stand up for myself and realize that true love entails respect, and that real men are strong enough to wait for the women they love. These relationships eventually ended, and despite being difficult to get over initially left me with no regrets. Now, I am in a relationship with a man who reinforces my conviction that premarital abstinence is the way to go. Every woman deserves to be treated well by a man who takes the time to discover her strengths and weaknesses, good points and imperfections, and love her for the whole package." ✖✖✖

Former Red Sox player Lou Merloni runs down his look.

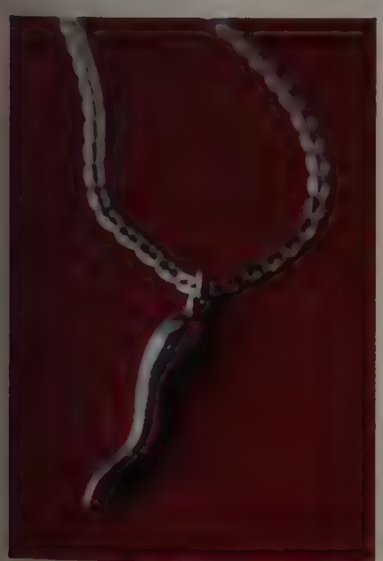
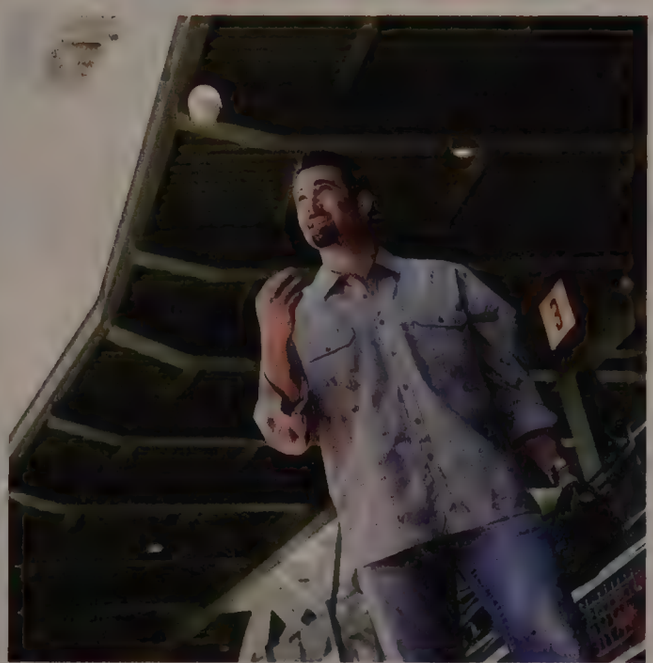
1. Athletes and superstitions go hand-in-hand. Lou Merloni is no exception. The WEEI sportscaster adorns his neckline with an Italian horn, made from his grandmother's gold tooth fillings. "I wear it every day. I used to put it in my mouth every time I was on deck—from high school to pro ball."





2. Who says guys don't have trouble in the denim department? Squatting as an infielder for five years can add some extra bulk. "My ass is too big, so [Lucky Brand jeans] fit the best."

3. A huge fan of watches, the New England native keeps five or six pairs on constant rotation, including a Movado and a Tag. "No matter where I go, I look at watches. They're not crazy or over the top; most of them are $150 to $200."

4. Smelling good means wearing Armani Black religiously. "I'm kind of old-school [when it comes to fragrance]. Every time I try something new it's too different." However, he'll switch up the routine when wife Steffanie picks a different scent.

5. The bowl cut may've been trendy at age 6, but today the 37-year-old keeps his coif a little longer and his goatee neatly trimmed. "The Red Sox minor leagues always had a rule that you couldn't have facial hair. So I started growing it when I joined the team in 1998. I try to keep it under control. I trim it once every three days." It'll become a daily routine when he joins NESN in the near future.

Baby Mama ★★ ½ Fans of Tina Fey's self-deprecating pratfalls on her terrific sitcom 30 Rock will be surprised at just how stiff and unconvincing she is on the big screen playing straight woman to Amy Poehler's trashy surrogate in this uneven farce from former SNL writer Michael McCullers. No points for guessing that Fey's bland career woman learns to loosen up thanks to Poehler's pee-in-the-sink rambunctiousness, but does the odious legacy of Adam Sandler dictate that every modern comedy starring SNL cast members must end with a schmaltzy courtroom confrontation? Burlington native Poehler gives her all to an erratically written character, but she's more successful in the earlier comedic scenes than the later sappy stuff. Indifferently photographed and poorly staged, the movie remains watchable thanks largely to an overqualified roster of supporting players, especially Sigourney Weaver's condescending executive and a marvelous turn from Steve Martin that's easily the funniest thing he's done in years. (At Boston Common and in the suburbs.)

The Chronicles of Narnia: Prince Caspian ★ What a violent and ugly militaristic slog this is! Sucking all the wonder out of CS Lewis' novel, director Andrew Adamson blew $100 million on special effects without mustering a single memorable image. Even the sunlight is pale and wan as those bratty, fairly indistinguishable Pevensie children return to their formerly enchanted fairyland to find that 1,300 years have passed and everybody's trapped in some sort of downcast Bored of the Rings with a bit of Hamlet in there, too. Ben Barnes makes Orlando Bloom seem captivating as the tedious title character who seeks vengeance and leads chintzy elfin creatures against some disturbing, racially coded baddies. There's no surprise, delight or anything resembling levity here, just one grim battle after another rendered in Adamson's hacky medium shots and close-ups. The light-skinned true-believers slaughter legions of swarthy, bearded heathens, all in preparation for the second coming of a lion (Jesus, as voiced by Liam Neeson) who doles out some even meaner divine retribution. Onward, Christian soldiers. Next stop: the Crusades, or Iran. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Forgetting Sarah Marshall ★★★ This filthy, winning comedy is the latest from producer Judd Apatow's seemingly inexhaustible well of schlubby guys, impossibly hot women and embarrassing sexual shenanigans. Jason Segel, who also penned the screenplay, stars as a heartbroken lummox running away to Hawaii in the wake of a bad breakup—only to find himself at the same resort as his ex (and her new beau, naturally.) It's a nifty hook, and Segel gets away with some astoundingly dirty jokes by approaching every scene with an almost childlike enthusiasm. His specialty consists of a snark-free delivery that's all the more hilarious for its ardor. Capably if unexceptionally directed by Nicholas Stoller, Forgetting Sarah Marshall meanders a bit before building to a climax that offers more smiles than belly laughs. But that spirit of affection is what lingers when the lights come up. It's actually a pleasure spending time with these people, which is a rare feeling at the movies these days. (At Harvard Square and in the suburbs.)

The Happening ★ Finally expunging any goodwill still left over from The Sixth Sense, writer-director M. Night Shyamalan's breathtaking career suicide arrives with this un-thrilling, anticlimactic environmental horror story. The comically miscast Mark Wahlberg stars as a sensitive science teacher on the run from an airborne plague that triggers violent suicides in all who dare inhale. The culprit happens to be a plethora of angry plants who've had it up to here with mankind's reckless pollution. You've never seen such silliness as Wahlberg and his ragtag band of survivors attempting to outrun the wind. The filmmaker's mannered close-ups and hushed silences have long since calcified into self-parody. It's a pity dynamic performers like Marky Mark, Zooey Deschanel and John Leguizamo are all directed to whisper their lines in the same numbed murmur. Shyamalan has never wavered from the stilted, funereal tone of his breakthrough hit, and his movies are growing increasingly airless as the storylines get goofier. He films dead people. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Indiana Jones And the Kingdom of the Crystal Skull ★★★ I'm still not sure there's any reason for this film to exist, but the extremely belated return of Dr. Henry Jones Jr. turns out to be a perfectly serviceable nostalgia piece. Keeping the jokey, family-comedy vibe of 1989's The Last

GIANT LETDOWN

The Incredible Hulk
Starring Edward Norton, Liv Tyler, Tim Roth, Tim Blake Nelson and William Hurt. Based on the comic book by Stan Lee and Jack Kirby. Screenplay by Zak Penn. Directed by Louis Leterrier. At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.

IF AT FIRST YOU DON'T SUCCEED, try, try again—a motto the folks at Marvel Studios have obviously taken to heart.

Hoping you won't remember they just made one of these movies a few years ago, Marvel has unleashed a big-screen reboot of Stan Lee and Jack Kirby's seminal saga about Dr. Bruce Banner and his pesky anger management issues.

But we remember. Director Ang Lee's artsy-fartsy 2003 take on the giant green guy was an epically wrong-headed effort, not to mention one of the most loathed blockbusters in recent history. Lee was coming off the surprise phenomenon Crouching Tiger, Hidden Dragon. Studio executives figured if he could rake in $100 million with a subtitled period piece about depressed people who can fly, they probably shouldn't second-guess his weird idea to have the Hulk fight genetically altered poodles.

Crusade, only with sharper filmmaking and a softer script, this romp through Atomic Age signifiers boasts some striking, at times purposefully cheesy visuals, along with Steven Spielberg's peerless mastery of kinetic energy. It's a treat to watch Harrison Ford deliver an honest-to-God performance again, and he perks up considerably during the too-few scenes when he resumes his screwball bickering with Karen Allen's Marion Ravenwood. The stakes are low but the spirits high, and Spielberg keeps everything bouncing along so jauntily, it's hard to even be bothered that the mystical alien gobbledygook plot doesn't make any sense. Crystal Skull is far more concerned with tickling viewers' memories of the hat, the whip and that rousing John Williams trumpet fanfare. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Iron Man ★★★ "I'm not really the hero type," quips Robert Downey Jr. with a glint in his eye, helpfully summing up this picture's off-kilter appeal in a nifty nutshell. The movie itself is well-assembled, fairly standard stuff, and there's not a plot point that won't feel familiar if you've sat through any of the billion or so comic book adaptations released in the past 10 years. Yet, somehow, Downey's snarky presence in the lead makes it seem like a wonderful act of subversion. According to formula, Iron Man winds up playing it safe and hitting all the expected, crowd-pleasing beats, but the movie works best if you consider it as an outsized chronicle of its star's own recent redemption—one of those weird pop culture artifacts in which actors comment upon themselves and their careers. Like Lindsay Lohan's I Know Who Killed Me, except not horrible. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Reprise ★★★★ This blast of pure exhilaration from new director Joachim Trier follows two friends and competing novelists through their rocky, post-collegiate tribulations. Troubled genius Phillip (Anders Danielsen Lie) becomes an instant cult hero with his first novel, while the more level-headed Erik (Espen Klouman Hoiner) has a tougher time finding his voice. There's a swaggering, joyful exuberance as our gang of rough and tumble Oslo intellectuals gorge on great books, punk rock and beautiful women. But what's loveliest about Reprise (besides the novelty of a movie daring to equate knowledge with excitement) is Trier's bittersweet view of the characters' emerging adulthood, which observes how youthful ardor mellows into something slightly saner, but no less nourishing. A marvelous coming-of-age film, Reprise is like Trainspotting, except with literature instead of heroin. (At Kendall Square.)

Savage Grace ★★ ½ Julianne Moore gives a go-for-broke performance as demented socialite Barbara Daly Baekeland in this icky, somewhat incoherent tale from director Tom Kalin. Constructed as an increasingly skeevy series of blackout sketches, the film attempts to encapsulate 25 years of dysfunctional family dynamics by plucking six choice anecdotes from Natalie Robins' book and fleshing them out into stark, vicious little one-acts. It's a lurching, often infuriating storytelling choice, as the only sense of momentum we're granted is the escalating ghastliness of Barbara's behavior. She's an amazing ogre, though, constantly humiliating her hopeless husband (Stephen Dillane) and doting

Alas, the poodles were only the tip of the iceberg. Lee's Hulk was also saddled with an insane Oedipal backstory, philosophical monologues growled by the nutzoid Nick Nolte, and a pretentious climax so berserk I assumed I'd fallen asleep and dreamed it. (I found myself phoning colleagues to see if the movie really ended with Nolte eating electricity and turning into a talking cloud.)

But it's easy to forget that Lee's Hulk also contained moments of great beauty. He split the cinemascope frame into sliding comic book panels, shifting our point of view sometimes several times within a single scene. Even if the effects were often iffy, there was a genuine sadness to this green monster, as Lee's curious shot selection aligned the Hulk with lichen and other natural phenomena, always emphasizing the creature's loneliness. The film's long, wordless stretch in the desert came close to poetry.

You'll find no such poetry in director Louis Leterrier's The Incredible Hulk, which is about as impersonal as these flicks can get. You can't call it a bad movie, but that's only because making a bad movie requires taking a few chances. An obsequious apology to fans for what happened last time, this streamlined Hulk cuts to the chase by dispensing with the origin story during the opening credits.

We catch the broad strokes of Bruce Banner's infection by gamma radiation and the subsequent furor of William Hurt's General Thunderbolt Ross, which sets up a macho-rivalry pivoting on Ross' dipstick daughter Betty. Played by Liv Tyler, she's Banner's only true love, and may also be the least convincing on-screen scientist since Denise Richards portrayed a nuclear physicist in that unfortunate James Bond movie I can't remember the name of right now.

It's a nifty trick the filmmakers are trying to pull here, throwing in fragments of scenes and pretending they're flashbacks to a movie we didn't actually see. This Incredible Hulk makes it clear that Lee's film is out of the equation, and instead harkens back to the '70s TV show. There's a nifty cameo for Lou Ferrigno; the score highlights elements of Joseph Harnell's TV theme song; and Leterrier even finds a way to get the late Bill Bixby involved.

Now played by Edward Norton, Banner is still a humorless, guilt-ridden sad sack. He wears a pulse monitor and relies on meditative breathing to avoid turning into an enormous green dude and ripping cars in half every time someone pisses him off. Norton's casting is either a coincidence or some sort of inside joke, as we've already seen him wrestling with a far more photogenic, but no less destructive, alter ego in Fight Club.

Zak Penn's uninspired screenplay doesn't explore the comic's heady psychological underpinnings and instead focuses on the moustache-twirling villainy of Banner's antagonist. Winning what seems to be a private contest with William Hurt as to who can overact more egregiously, Tim Roth costars as an aging soldier who willingly infects himself with an untested super-soldier serum so he might grow to Hulkish-proportions. A hefty chunk of the film is devoted to watching these two gigantic apparitions tearing the hell out of Harlem, tossing automobiles, pounding their feet through pavement and generally providing all sorts of childish delights.

Leterrier is a perfectly competent craftsman behind the camera, and he makes the most out of some glaringly obvious soundstages and budget-conscious Canadian locations. The movie wisely cuts away at the close of every big smack-down, assuming that if we're hustled along to the next scene quickly enough, nobody will have time to wonder how a green man the size of a building always slips away unnoticed.

As far as recent comic flicks go, The Incredible Hulk is missing the crackling adult energy Robert Downey Jr. brought to Iron Man or the grim sophistication of Christopher Nolan's Batman Begins. It's so perfunctory and by-the-numbers, you may find yourself longing for that Nick Nolte cloud and his evil army of poodles. ✖✖✖ on her son Tony (Eddie Redmayne) with an ardor that's queasily inappropriate even before things get kinky. Moore's specialty as an actress is locating the humanity inside these oversized, stylized performances, and what keeps Savage Grace bearable are the quick glimmers of pain that sometimes slip through Barbara's hardened gaze. It's astounding work, even when Moore's prim and proper diction veers a bit too close to Maude Lebowski. (At Kendall Square and Waltham Embassy.)

Sex and the City ★ ½ A telling early shot finds Sarah Jessica Parker and friends with their noses smushed up against the display case of a $50,000 diamond ring, thus setting the tone for the following 135 minutes of covetous consumption. With five costume changes, even the opening credits are a parade of product placements. Calling the film light on plot would be generous. Carrie and Miranda are treated shabbily by longtime loves, so they spend an entire calendar year ignoring apologies and wallowing in self-pity while Charlotte and Samantha drop by for drinks. Meanwhile, there are fashions, labels and lavish living spaces. Luxury porn and brand-name loyalty haven't been this fetishized since American Psycho. Inexplicably longer than Letters From Iwo Jima, Sex and the City leaves you feeling sorry for these shallow women and their empty, avaricious lives. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Shine a Light ★★★ What was once rebellious eventually becomes part of the establishment. This isn't a slight, just a simple fact of life, and it's one that Martin Scorsese seems to have grown comfortable with, judging from his exuberant, if inessential, Rolling Stones concert documentary. Having enlisted an army of the world's most formidable cinematographers, including Children of Men's Emmanuel Lubeszki, There Will Be Blood's Robert Elswit and even Gimme Shelter's Albert Maysles, Scorsese has 17 cameras trained closely on the action. Shot over two nights at New York's Beacon Theatre in the fall of 2006, the concert is a mixed bag. "Jumpin'

Jack Flash," "Satisfaction" and especially that tedious Microsoft anthem, "Start Me Up," are rote at best. But Shine a Light discovers magic in lesser-known tracks from Exile on Main St. and Some Girls, often capturing intimate onstage moments as Mick and the boys seem to truly enjoy playing the numbers they aren't forced to perform every damn night. (In the suburbs.)

Speed Racer ★★ ½ This summer's designated critical whipping-boy is indeed a bit garish and about twice as long as it needs to be, but anyone who's ever seen a Matrix movie will tell you that the Wachowski brothers have a knack for gumming up simple sagas in endless, expository convolutions. To that end, Speed Racer is the first kiddie flick to contain diatribes about corporate sponsorship and make stock market manipulation central to the plot. Yet as far as pure visual expression goes, this is genuinely groundbreaking, with folding flashbacks, cross-cuts and simultaneous planes of action forming a whizzing barrage of breathtaking images. With real-life actors existing quite comfortably in an almost entirely computer-generated universe, this often tacky, weirdly heartfelt movie is perhaps best appreciated by children, who are more likely to respond to the sleek pictorial storytelling without paying mind to the Wachowskis' usual messianic jibber-jabber. These guys could be geniuses if they ever get out of their own way. (In the suburbs.)

The Strangers ★★ First-time writer-director Bryan Bertino displays a tremendous knack for widescreen compositions but unfortunately little else in this grim technical exercise. Liv Tyler and Scott Speedman whimper effectively as a hapless yuppie couple besieged and tortured by masked home invaders, in what ultimately amounts to yet another remake of Funny Games, only missing the academic pedantry and contempt. Bertino and cinematographer Peter Sova are obvious students of early John Carpenter movies, as they eschew modern shock cuts in favor of classically constructed, languorous long shots, which allow background and foreground planes of action to work against one another in a truly unsettling fashion. But to what end? Mercilessly stripped down to the barest of bones, The Strangers doesn't have a plot, just an unfortunate situation. There's no subtext here—heck, there's hardly any text—only an empty, mechanical excellence. Bertino knows how to make a movie. All he needs is time to come up with a story, and we'll have someone to watch. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

The Visitor ★★★ ½ Wonderful character actor Richard Jenkins finally gets a chance to shine as a leading man in writer-director Tom McCarthy's warm, beautifully understated New York story. Jenkins stars as a gruff, emotionally constipated college professor who strikes up an unlikely friendship with a Syrian immigrant (Haaz Sleiman) and begins to reconnect with his better self, finally venturing out in bustling Greenwich Village and even learning how to play the African drum. As in his delightful debut film, The Station Agent, McCarthy demonstrates a rare gift for observing behavior, allowing his characters to grow and letting their silences speak volumes. But just when you're settling in for yet another "white guy learns a lesson from minorities" homily, the film takes a sharp left turn into darker waters. Without getting preachy, the movie paints a vivid portrait of a post-9/11 America governed by confusion and fear. McCarthy never pushes the material, shrewdly understanding that Jenkins' sad eyes can tell the whole story. (At Kendall Square and Waltham Embassy.)

You Don't Mess With the Zohan ★ ★ Admit it. You've been dying to hear Adam Sandler's take on Israeli-Palestinian relations, haven't you? Lurching between inspiration and inanity, this bizarre farce stars Sandler as a supernaturally skilled Mossad agent bored by the cycle of Middle Eastern strife. Tired of capturing and recapturing his archnemesis (played with reckless abandon by John Turturro), Zohan fakes his death and heads for America to fulfill his dream of becoming a hairstylist, even if that means taking a job on "the Palestinian side of the street." Briefly picking up plotlines only to drop them just as quickly, this overlong film eventually comes around to depicting a lovely world where everybody can get along and eat hummus together, if they only learn to communicate. Coscripted by Sandler, TV Funhouse genius Robert Smigel and the ubiquitous Judd Apatow, You Don't Mess With the Zohan has almost enough insightful throwaway gags to make you forget all the gross-out sex, penis jokes and Dennis Dugan's abysmal, inattentive direction. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

In the wake of loss, Widespread Panic rediscovers its groove.

Widespread Panic
plays July 10 at the Bank of America Pavilion.

JOHN BELL CENTERS THE MIDTEMPO MAELSTROM of Widespread Panic with a whiskey-textured voice that projects earthy emotion. Just don't expect the front man for the veteran jam-rock combo to look at you while he's singing.

"I like to close my eyes and picture what's going on with the characters in the song, to watch it unfold," singer-guitarist Bell says. "I sure don't look at the audience a whole lot. My business is up there with the band."

He has gone about that business with workmanlike efficiency for 22 years. The Georgia sextet first carved a national niche in 1992 when it joined kindred spirits Blues Traveler, Phish, the Spin Doctors and the Aquarium Rescue Unit on the inaugural H.O.R.D.E. Tour, whose acronym stood for Horizons of Rock Developing Everywhere. But the slow and steady win the race. While most of those eclectic outfits have long since fallen by the wayside, Widespread Panic has endured with its long-time lineup nearly intact.

"We're always the last ones to leave a party," says Bell, 46, whose band plays the Bank of America Pavilion July 10, has become a frequent Bonnaroo headliner, and often ranks among the 50 highest-grossing live acts. "I'd always considered myself in my 20s, even when I was way into my 30s!"

But longevity and success have come with tragedy and challenge since lead guitarist Michael Houser died from pancreatic cancer in 2002, forcing Widespread to regroup.

"On so many levels, it would be hard to imagine not sticking with it," Bell says of the band he cofounded with Houser, who was nicknamed Panic for his anxiety attacks. They played parties around the University of Georgia as a duo before adding bassist Dave Schools, then drummer Todd Nance, covering the Grateful Dead, Traffic and Buffalo Springfield while birthing several originals. By the early '90s, they had rounded out the lineup with percussionist Domingo S. Ortiz and keyboardist John "JoJo" Hermann.

Widespread Panic has endured with its long-term lineup nearly intact.

After Houser's passing, guitarist George McConnell stepped in to perform with the group on both sides of a 15-month hiatus that began in 2004. But in 2006, Widespread handed the reins to Jimmy Herring, who initially had been asked to fill the void, but was committed to touring with Phil Lesh.

"We missed him on the first go-around, but we caught him on the backside," Bell quips of the quicksilver guitarist they know from his days with the Aquarium Rescue Unit and as a hired gun with the Dead and the Allman Brothers Band. Citing his ability, work ethic, consistency and demeanor, Bell says, "I don't know anyone like him out there. He's like the cream of the crop and we got real lucky."

A year and a half into his new role, Herring has grown more familiar with the 100-plus songs in Widespread's rotation. "When we talk about it and we're going over the set lists, we talk about potential places of departure," Bell says. "You've got to be able to listen and hear where the music is moving to—and be willing to take over the reins."

Herring also contributed to the group's new studio outing, Free Somehow, the second disc that Widespread has recorded in the Bahamas with producer Terry Manning. Manning is best known for his hits with ZZ Top and Stax Records, the latter experience a plus when it came to horns on "Up All Night," which accents Widespread's R&B side. "That's something that Terry brings to the table," Bell says, "the extra colors."

The singer himself branches beyond metaphorical musings for "Walk on the Flood," a condensed reflection on CNN imagery from the Virginia Tech shootings and Hurricane Katrina.

Yet even in the face of shared tragedy, Bell suggests, "Everybody perceives the world slightly differently than the guy next to him. In that sense, we are really creating our own world and having our own unique experiences."

The same could be said for those who absorb the euphoric groove of Widespread Panic, even with their eyes closed. ✖✖✖

Mary Rozzi

We've Got Her Numbers

Feist for the Senses

Behold the power of iPod Nano commercials. Feist had a career before her song "1234" got picked up by Apple's advertising team, but it didn't include four Grammy nominations and a hit album, The Reminder. The Nova Scotia native began performing at a young age—she was one of 1,000 dancers at the opening ceremony of the Calgary Winter Olympics; her high school band opened for the Ramones. After losing her voice in 1998, Feist tried her hand at the guitar, strumming her way through tours with By Divine Right and Broken Social Scene. But on July 8 at the Bank of America Pavilion, Feist is on her own—bangs, ballet bun and all. And she's never sounded better.

IMPROPER Sightings!

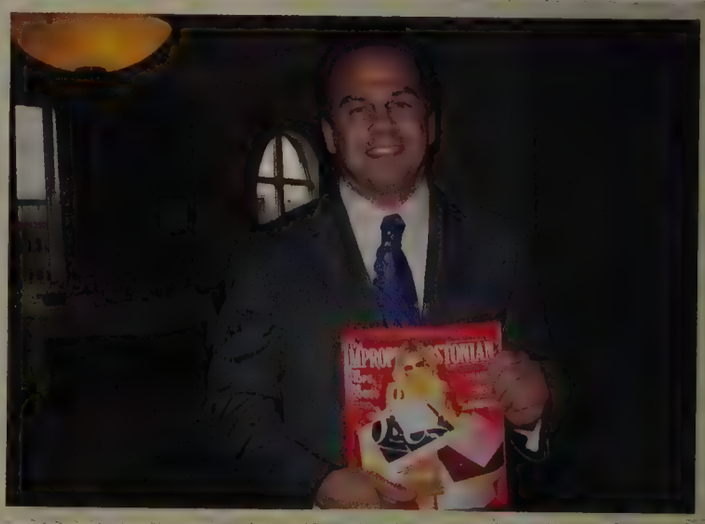
ATTENTION BOUNTY HUNTERS! BONUS POINTS TO ANYONE WHO CAN CAPTURE AN IMPROPER READER POSING WITH A FAMILY OF 17 AT THE SUMMER REDNECK GAMES, HELD JULY 5 IN EAST DUBLIN, GA.

Unlike the rest of your friends, we want to see the photos from your next trip. Where did you take us? Send us a picture of you or a buddy, or better yet, someone famous reading THE IMPROPER BOSTONIAN and tell us where you were. The wilder your destination and the more creative your photo, the better your chances of making the cut in the esteemed IMPROPER Sightings.

Detra Glinatsis, Monica Bennett and Sue LaScalza celebrated Monica's wedding down in Aruba. The nuptials were performed as the bride and her friends hovered gracefully above the ocean's surface.

Matt Metivier and Cliff Gibbons visited Nairobi, Kenya, where random Bostonians travel each year to dominate the city's storied marathon.

Anthony Caturano, Ciara Shay and Louis Stouffberg went on a hunting safari in South Africa. There weren't many other people out there, so a rogue rhinoceros was kind enough to take this shot.



In his free time, Providence mayor David N. Cicilline moonlights as a French-Canadian songstress named Cicilline Dion. But you didn't hear that from us.

CLAW TO THE TOP

[JUNE 21–JULY 22]
Make the celebration last. Whether it's the summer solstice, a wedding, your birthday or preparing for the July 4 holiday, try to turn the festivities into a real vacation. While magnetic Venus is still in your sign, it would be criminal not to take advantage of how attractive you'll seem to almost everyone you encounter. There'll be time for the serious stuff, like working hard and worrying about money later on, but while this irresistible force is with you, use it to make friends and influence influential people.

LEO [July 23–August 22]
You have until July 1 before the boost of physical energy and motivation Mars has infused in you runs out. Once the Red Planet leaves Leo, it'll be 16 months—October 2009—before you can kick ass as thoroughly as you have been. So either act fast right now or else start devising your comeback. The good news is that, instead of its usual six- or seven-week tour of duty, Mars will remain in your sign until June 2010, retrograde from the winter solstice until mid-March. Make a note, plan ahead.

VIRGO [August 23–September 22]
One sign's loss is another's gain. Courageous Mars brings its "me first" leadership qualities to Virgo for the first time since the summer of '06. If you enjoyed a particularly productive or successful time of it then, you can look forward to having another one now. But if you were laid up, badly bitten, sunburned, bruised or broken, then you know that Martian energy, that extra shot of derring-do, can be dangerous—particularly for a Virgin who isn't in the habit of throwing caution to the wind. Forewarned, forearmed.

LIBRA [September 23–October 22]
Press-worthy career accomplishments may not be necessary; you could receive acclaim and gather genuine compliments too, simply because your Venus ruler is currently in your Cancer midheaven. The career component is also unnecessary; perhaps it's your family name (specifically a woman in it) that's attracting so much attention. Over the next four weeks, as the sun transits the sign of the Crab, it'll shine even more light on how the rest of the world perceives you. If you're auditioning for Top Chef, you're in luck.

SCORPIO [October 23–November 21]
Attention to career concerns may start to wane when your Mars coruler leaves Leo, the sign ruling your reputation and success. While the god of strife is transiting discerning Virgo, you'll be amazed at how precisely you'll be able to analyze what you did well and what went wrong. Meanwhile, inventive Uranus in your Pisces house of pleasure and romance, retrograde until Thanksgiving, is urging you to repeat memorable experiences you've shared with interesting people. The risks you convinced yourself to take won't seem as risky.

SAGITTARIUS [November 22–December 21] A calm seems to descend on the Centaur during the summer; the frenzy dissipates as the planets move out of Gemini. This year, however, busybody Mercury stays in your sign of significant others until July 10, stirring up controversies you'd be only too glad to ignore. Instead, you may be making phone call after phone call, particularly while disruptive Uranus turns retrograde in your Pisces home base. Another force that can disturb the seasonal serenity: Physically fit Mars visits health-conscious Virgo from July 1 to Aug. 19.

CAPRICORN [December 22–January 20]
You could be more generous with yourself, giving to significant others from the bottom of your heart. But it's more likely that, as the opposition between prosperous Jupiter in your sign and appreciative Venus in your Cancer complement attain perfection on July 2, you'll be tapping into funds you can still draw on. Know that shortly after the goddess extracts her due, the Cancer sun will follow. Try to keep something in reserve, because nothing urges you to go whole-hog like the extravagant sun-Jupiter opposition.

AQUARIUS [January 21–February 18]
Once your progressive Uranus ruler, the last of the outer planets to turn retrograde, flips on June 26, the summer slump becomes official. You may still harbor expectations, but cozy Cancer planetary energy is concentrating on recreation and, if lovable Venus truly favors Uranus over the July 4 weekend, romance. Even active Mars, having boosted interest in your Leo partnership zone since Mother's Day, is moving on to Virgo. However, do not abandon hope; Venus brings harmony into the Lion's den on July 12.

PISCES [February 19–March 19]
"To everything, there is a season," etc. It seems that this summer is your season to get well, work hard and achieve some sort of success. Congratulations! However, because secretive Pluto dominates your career midheaven, the rest of us aren't quite sure how to measure that achievement. If it occurs as June ends, when aggressive Mars adds its energy to Pluto's regenerative powers, let us know. Or not. After the Red Planet enters your Virgo complement, its effect on your working relationships or your health will be apparent.

ARIES [March 20–April 19]
It might not be your top priority for the summer; nonetheless, this would be an excellent time for the Ram to undertake a do-it-yourself project around the house. The Crab governs the foundation of your solar chart, your family tree and its roots, how you were nurtured and where you find shelter from the storm. Since it's also where some of those storms originated, try to begin repairs before June ends, before your truth-seeking Mars ruler crosses from warm-hearted Leo to critical Virgo for the next seven weeks.

TAURUS [April 20–May 20]
Now that Mercury is moving forward again, financial matters should start straightening themselves out. However, as the Messenger proceeds through your Gemini house of acquisitions and assets, remind yourself that it won't return to where it was when it went retrograde on Memorial Day until Independence Day. Best to go slow and see what happens before making major purchases or signing deals. Also good to know: Unpredictable Uranus in your house of colleagues and group activity is in abeyance from June 26 until Thanksgiving.

GEMINI [May 21–June 20]
Read for Taurus. Although your entire life can be affected by which direction—forward or backward — your Mercury ruler is facing, what Twins tend to notice first is what's going on with the money. Where did you last use that credit card? Did you pay the phone bill on time? You would know immediately that you have a flat tire and need to fix it, but do you have to buy four new ones? Try to take some time to see what falls into place, what should be done sooner rather than later. Mercury remains in Gemini until July 10.

SHH... IT'S A SURPRISE

Stacey Lucchino and Patricia Bellinger at the Surprise Party

Isn't It Romantic?

Just in time to sabotage any last-ditch efforts to get into swimsuit shape, the Greater Boston Food Bank's Kitchen Cabinet hosted its Step Into Summer Gourmet BBQ at the Four Seasons, serving up every seasonal temptation known to man, from pulled pork to macaroni and cheese to any (fried) thing in between.

Besides gobbling up all that good grub and imbibing copious cocktails, guests compared notes on their summer plans, with the most common phrases being "Nantucket" and "Martha's Vineyard," with "the Cape," "Maine" and "the Hamptons" tied for a close third.

Looking suspiciously tanned, relaxed and rested (apparently, this wasn't a dress rehearsal) were such oh-so-social so-and-so's as Clark Kent look-alike JB Dowd, the patrician Peter Creighton, Chappaquiddnick Justin Dangel, the angelic Mary Hull, Indian goddess Renu Babu, and one guest wearing an outfit that someone else called "a triumph of optimism over reality."

All of which was proof positive that summer has officially arrived—except, that is, for the hotel staff.

According to one of them, "Summer doesn't start for us until we've shoved the last bride down the last aisle on the last day in June."

Guess the Fashion Editor ▶

This is her from the neck down. Her column appears in a local magazine. She has a penchant for bright red lipstick, chunky, geometric accessories and a vocabulary that goes beyond the words "fabulous" and "absolutely." Channeling Auntie Mame (minus the martini glass and cigarette holder), Diana Vreeland (minus the big nose) and Anna Wintour (minus the bitchery), she's less about "this season" or "that season" than she is about what real people are wearing right now. The first reader who properly guesses her identity will receive a commendation from the fashion police, along with an Improper Bostonian T-shirt, which, as any fashion editor will tell you, is a definite Glamour Do.

Can you name the mystery editrix?

Memo to European Royals...

The biggest surprise about the Surprise Party—a mega-glitzy fundraiser for the Friends of Dana-Farber Cancer Institute—was that they were able to plan such a top-shelf, over-the-top event in such a short period of time.

Two months from conception to execution, the evening began with a reception in the lobby of the Wang Center, where up-and-coming pop-era singer N'Kenge (Clive Davis' new protégée) wowed the crowd, after which they were showered with confetti shot from guns and falling four stories onto guests trying valiantly to protect their cocktails.

Next, everyone was ushered into the theater, where there were heartfelt words from vice-chairs Bill Karol and David Fialkow, followed by TV doc Bob Arnot (who's as folksy in person as he is on TV).

Next, John O'Hurley (best known as J. Peterman from Seinfeld) came out and riffed on the demi-ness of his celebrity before hosting an elaborate game show, complete with cheesy backdrops and even cheesier music, where contestants could win things like the use of a Jaguar convertible, a five-star trip for four to Los Angeles, and Red Sox, Patriots and Bruins packages (which, perhaps for the first time in history, were all actually worth what people were willing to pay for them).

When the game show was over, everyone was ushered onstage for a sumptuous (if a bit on the late side) dinner, and then a curtain lifted to reveal a disco where anyone who still had any energy left could work off dessert.

Renu Babu at the Kitchen Cabinet's Gourmet BBQ

Present and accounted for: rainmaker Steve Karol and the incredibly chic Michelle, the no-intro-necessary Larry and Stacey Lucchino, London transplant Patty Bellinger (wearing some serious jewelry), statuesque blonde Kim Kozol and her husband, Matthew, statuesque blonde Meredith Starr and her husband, Billy, and one woman wearing sapphire-and-diamond-encrusted bifocals, who said, "You wear 'em everywhere else; why not on your glasses?"

Topping the whole thing off, a scratch ticket under each plate proclaimed every guest a winner, and on their way out, they collected party favors that were nicer than most wedding gifts.

Summing the whole evening up, one guest said: "Jesus Christ! I've been to coronations less elaborate than that." ✖✖✖

The Best of Times

As editor, I often feel like a walking guidebook. Requests from readers, friends and acquaintances fill my in-box. Sushi, party dresses, wine, sports tickets—they want advice on all of it. I've planned entire road trip itineraries, complete with hiking and dining destinations, for practical strangers. Thankfully, I enjoy pairing people with the perfect experience.

But it's a lot of work—so what a relief to finish this year's Boston's Best Issue, our annual digest of the city's finest. This is the ultimate cheat sheet, reflecting more than just the whims of yours truly. As is our tradition, we gathered a group of experts, from athletes and politicos to business owners and chefs, at a dinner party. Between bites, the judges voted on categories, including Food & Drink and Goods & Services. Back in the office, we tallied the ballots, eliminated conflicts of interest and added our own 2 cents.

The result is this 240-page issue, even longer than last year's… and much more thorough than an e-mail from me. It's a case of more is better, which could also be said about our cover guys, the seven members of the Dropkick Murphys. The band convened at McGreevy's 3rd Base Saloon for a playful photo shoot that made The Improper even bigger fans. And later, vocalist Ken Casey scratched out a song for us. Which is pretty much the coolest thing to ever pop up in my in-box.

SCENE OF THE VINE

Not long ago, Massachusetts wine had a reputation akin to that of professional hockey in Florida: It existed, but no one could really explain why. Westport Rivers Vineyard & Winery, the biggest vineyard in New England, rehabilitated that image in a froth of fruit-scented bubbles.

"Our sparkling wines stand up to the best," says Rob Russell, 43, son of winery founders Bob and Carol and their vineyard manager for the past 22 years. He's not spewing sales twaddle. Westport's Brut Cuvée RJR, a blend of estate chardonnay and pinot noir, has earned heated media praise over the years and is poured at top-notch New England restaurants like L'Espalier. Russell attributes the quality of Westport Rivers' sparklers to the maritime climate.

"We're three miles from Buzzards Bay," Russell says. His great-grandfather owned a winery in New York, so vino is in the bloodline. "The seasons here are moderated by the ocean. But we have a cool grape-growing region, very similar to northern France—Champagne and Alsace." The terroir of southern New England makes for flavorful but balanced white and rosé sparklers that can hold up to the best European vintages.

"There's this mantra—if it's any good, it can't be from my backyard," says Russell. "We've overcome the belief that it can't be good if it comes from this part of the world. We've made a world-class wine."

A world-class wine ideal for toasting our world-class Boston's Best winners.

The shocking thing about eating brains is neither their gelatinous texture nor their associations with zombie movies. It's their gentle taste, their absence of offal's mineral tang. KO Prime calves' brains piperade ($14) is so delicate that it needs a foundation of spicy chorizo to anchor it from drifting into the insipid. The ivory-colored meat is as mild as fresh milk and has the consistency of warm brie. It's pretty, too; instead of coming in a fearful lump, the brains are served as golden cutlets layered on the sausages and a reduction of red peppers, shallots, garlic and ham. Even the most squeamish vegan couldn't make a snide Indiana Jones and the Temple of Doom reference to chef Jamie Bissonnette's inspired offal. As seventh-grade humorists say, a mind is a wonderful thing to taste.

Throwback Daq

Here on her day off, Misty Kalkofen has a chilled glass waiting before I even walk through the door. Twenty minutes later, there are four bottles and seven used glasses on the bar, a walk-through of a single cocktail saturated in history and punctuated by cannon blasts of Kalkofen laughter. That enthusiasm and experience have put the Green Street bar manager on the short list of best mixologists in the city.

"Does anybody even like that word?" I ask.

"I like it better than bar chef," Kalkofen says, followed by a thundercrack cackle.

One of Green Street's summer additions is Avery's Arrack-ari ($8.50), a take on a daiquiri using Batavia Arrack, a spirit hardly seen since Prohibition, now returned as consumers' thirst for new tastes leads them to seek out forgotten flavors. Like an Indonesian rum, Batavia Arrack is distilled from sugarcane, but with an addition of Javanese red rice. It's more viscous than rum, which Kalkofen accentuates by twirling a glass like an oenophile and looking for legs. The flavor is distinct, as well. "They ferment the red rice, and that gives it this funk you don't find in other sugarcane distillates," she explains.

Kalkofen was already putting Batavia Arrack in daiquiris, but this iteration came from a suggestion from local bitters bottler Avery Glasser. "He thought the smokiness of a Scotch would go well with the Arrack—just a rinse—and it was great," Kalkofen says. "The smokiness, in my opinion, rounds out the funk." She tweaked the normal daiquiri formula, upping the syrup and lime proportions to compensate for the Arrack's heat and minimum 100-proof punch. The resulting cocktail begins sweet and citric, but takes a sharp turn toward smoky with a peculiar tang on the finish. "The smokiness is what lingers, which is what I like," shares Kalkofen. "I don't like too much citrus. It reminds me of heartburn."

For diners, the Arrack-ari makes a fine foil for grilled fish, as the peat from the Scotch and the flavor from the fire meld. Playing sommelier, Kalkofen explains the combination as "the way you'd pair a stainless white wine with seafood, like a Sancerre or a Loire sauvignon blanc." And with that, another glass is poured and another lesson begins.

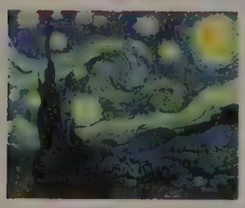
ASK THE EXPERT



Q: WHAT TYPE OF ART INVESTMENT MAKES SENSE IN A TIGHT ECONOMY?

TOM SMITH OWNER OF THE KIDDER SMITH GALLERY
KIDDERSMITHGALLERY.COM

My advice to collectors in a down economy is to turn to well-known art fairs to add to your collection. Galleries will be bringing their best inventory and showcasing their most [recognizable] artists. You can also do one of two things: First, purchase young artists fresh out of strong graduate art programs where collectors get a lot of bang for their buck. Your other option is to stick to buying more expensive work by well-known artists, but make sure you do your homework and make sure the work warrants the price tag. Lastly, you need to be passionate about the work that you collect, because at the end of the day, if you love the painting/photograph/sculpture then it has an inherent value on a personal and economic level.

Question for Heidi Watney

What are your three favorite Fenway moments so far?

Newcomer Heidi Watney reports on the Red Sox for NESN, providing live in-game updates during the network's baseball coverage.

1. One of them came in the first few days [after] I arrived in Boston. Before I started reporting on air, the Red Sox allowed me to sit in various locations around the park and get the "Fenway experience" from all different angles. The greatest was sitting in the Green Monster seats one night. I also sat in the second row down the third base line. It's pretty incredible to watch a game right at field level.

2. Another thing that I've loved about Fenway is the fans. It's really special to be at Fenway and see everyone in their seats from the first pitch until the last out, rain or shine. I also loved when the "Beat L.A." chants would start as the Celtics were making their run to the NBA championship. As a true sports fan, I really appreciate when others get fired up about their teams.

3. The best Fenway moment came on May 19, my birthday, and the day Jon Lester pitched a no-hitter. That's a night I have trouble describing. It was that special. The electricity and emotion in the crowd as we got into the later innings, and everyone realized what was happening, was so amazing. I had never witnessed a no-hitter in person before, and it's something I will never forget. And to have the privilege of running onto the field and interviewing him right after the last out was made is a special moment in my life.

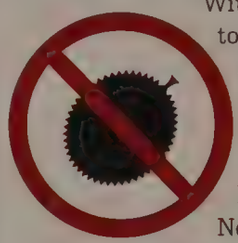
THE MAGIC FRUIT

Adventures in durian tasting

BECAUSE I EITHER HAVE adventurous tastes or watch too much Travel Channel, durian has always intrigued me. It's known as the "King of Fruits," probably for its resemblance to a spiked bowling ball. (Had Isaac Newton been sitting under a durian tree, we'd still be living in a world without the concept of gravity.)

There's also the stench, which has gotten durian banned from hotels and public transport all over Southeast Asia. On an episode of Bizarre Foods, Andrew Zimmern ate a still-beating heart and a stir-fried bat, but he couldn't choke down some fetid durian. The novelist Anthony Burgess wrote that durian consumption is "like eating sweet raspberry blancmange in the lavatory." Dessert and scatological humor? Sounds delicious.



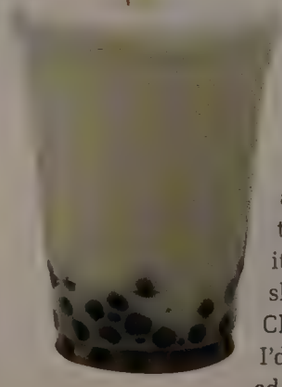
With that in mind, I decided to find the best durian shake in Boston—one that encapsulates the horrors durian wages upon the wimpy Western palate, but in a cutesier form. Needing to discover what durian actually tastes like, I bought frozen segments at a Super 88. Back at the office, even through the plastic casing and shrink-wrap, the thawing flesh emitted a distinct funk. Said one office mate, "I'm going to start farting in here to take away the smell." After being cursed for merely pretending to open the packaging, I stayed late with the only coworker brave enough to eat it with me.

She described the flavor as "a cross between a lychee and a sweet onion." That's fairly accurate, and actually sounds somewhat tasty, but it doesn't begin to describe the impact of that flesh first hitting my virgin taste buds. My synapses fired in alternating bouts—my tongue telling my brain and nose, "It's not so bad," and my esophagus shouting back, "Screw you guys, I'm not swallowing." Then there was the smell, a bouquet we broke down as cheese, fecal matter and natural gas. The reek of Nstar was so strong, it prompted a colleague to leap from her office 30 feet down the hall and shout, "Do you guys smell gas? I've gotta get out of here!"

Enlightened and armed with a list of seven durian-dishing venues, I set off for Chinatown. My first stop was Penang, where $4 got what amounted to a durian icy. "You can put the sugar, but it's sweet already," the waiter advised. Walking out, I realized that the best thing about durian shakes is the lid, which caps the funk like a manhole cover. The blend had a milky, rotten banana flavor, and when it came through the straw icy, it wasn't half bad. The occasional warmed patches, however, were like pulls from a colostomy bag.

At Saigon Sandwich, a durian shake ($3) included tapioca bubbles, condensed milk "and sugar, don't forget the sugar," the counterwoman said. Words to live by, should you take this journey yourself. Thanks to the bubbles, there was a wider straw that fired durian slush like a waste pipe, but the sweetener took the edge off. It was like spoiled milk after a bowl of Frosted Flakes.

Fear struck my heart when I ordered a second bubble shake from Xinh Xinh ($3.70) and smelled the fruit 20 feet from the blender. Ignoring the muffled weeping of my stomach, I forged ahead to find the best durian iteration yet. Fresh and pungent, all the shock value was there, but given the Dunkin Donuts treatment, there was enough sugar and half-and-half to ease the finish.



This one's a great rookie introduction to durian, and a friend may even take a second sip before wondering why they hang out with you.

For the actual durian enthusiast, there's Pho Soa. Their shake ($2.75) was strong and, being extra thick, allowed for strict portion control, so I took four delicate sips before chucking it. I was done, palate-fatigued, milk-shake-sick and about to barf all over Chinatown. I had three places left, but I'd tackled the stink head-on and ingested enough durian to choke a flock of fruit bats. Eat it, Zimmern. ✖✖✖

STELLA ARTOIS

Perfection HAS ITS PLACE

A perfectly poured Stella Artois is the Gold Standard of Belgian beer.

Step One THE PURIFICATION

The bartender selects the signature glass for the beer being poured. The glass is scrubbed in a cool-water bath, preferably with a mild detergent. It's then rinsed with cold water to chill the glass.

Step Two THE SACRIFICE

The tap is opened in one swift motion to let the first burst of foam flow away. It must never enter the glass, thus ensuring every drop of beer is fresh.

Step Three THE LIQUID ALCHEMY

The glass is held at a 45-degree angle to create the perfect balance of liquid to foam.

Step Four THE HEAD

The head is created by straightening and lowering the glass. The foam is visually appealing and releases the beer's aroma.

Step Five THE REMOVAL

The bartender closes the tap in one quick action and moves the glass away from the faucet to ensure no drops spoil the perfect head.

Step Six THE BEHEADING

While the beer is flowing over the edge of the glass, the bartender cuts the head gently with a head cutter at a 45-degree angle. This eliminates the larger bubbles that burst easily and accelerate the dissipation of the head.

Step Seven THE JUDGMENT

The bartender now stands in judgment. The beer's head should be two fingers thick.

Step Eight THE CLEANSING

The bartender then rinses the bottom and sides of the glass. This keeps the glass clean and cool and makes it comfortable to hold.

Step Nine THE BESTOWAL

A perfectly poured pint of Belgian beer is presented with the logos of the coaster and glass facing the customer.

Toast of the Town

Best wines of the year? First we have to define "best." To me it's a bottle that evokes powerful memories, that takes you to another time and place. But what magically transports us might depend on the food or company, so it's based on personal experience. Thus maximum tasting Pleasure (note the capital "P") is the only criterion that makes sense—but how can you possibly quantify that? There's no meter. We all know that things taste better if they don't cost too much. On the other hand, some wines are so extraordinary that money should be left out of the equation. More important is the wine's uniqueness, the information about its origins, the emotion that sipping it brings to the surface. So accepting the fact that this is hopelessly individual, here are the three "best" I've had this year.

Craggy Range, Fletcher Family Vineyard, Riesling, Marlborough, New Zealand, 2007 ($23, Top Shelf, Boston) This winery is one of New Zealand's elite producers, and fortunately for us, not many people know about that country's wonderful rieslings. Although the grape variety has been hot, there's still very little stylistic definition coming from the Kiwis. This single-vineyard offering is poised right on the borderline of sweet and dry, with tantalizingly crisp apple-like acids to balance the minimal sugars. It has nice weight on the palate, with succulent peachy fruit and fine, pure acids. The product of sparse-yielding stony soils, its flavors resonate with sugar, fruit and lovely mineral essences in wonderful tandem. Pair it with curried shrimp, or wait for a few more years.

Veuve Clicquot "Rare Vintage," Reims, France, 1988 ($110, Vinodivino, Newton) OK, so it's an incredible luxury (what champagne isn't today?), but in the context of vintage-dated rarities, this sleek, recently disgorged beauty is actually a bargain. Amazingly creamy and richly textured after aging on the yeast for close to 20 years, it has brilliant aromas of toasted nuts, vanilla, citrus and cherry. Very classy on the palate as well, with constantly evolving flavors of brioche, spice, and red and white fruits, this defines the concept of maturity in champagne. Its flavors linger and fade only after a few delicious minutes on your palate. It's heavenly with a poached fish in lemon-butter sauce.

Catena Alta Malbec, Mendoza, Argentina, 2005 ($45, Marty's Liquors, Boston) For pure sensuality, there's little that can beat malbec at any price point nowadays. Bodegas Catena Zapata is the alpha producer, its founder and originator. Their "Alta" is the marvel of malbec. It's a blend of grapes from five different high-altitude vineyards, so the flavors are intense. While still a baby, the 2005 vintage already tastes opulent and magnificently full. Redolent of herb, vanilla, black cherry and chocolate mocha aromatic nuances, it's silky and lush on the palate, with an almost sweet-cream texture. A pure varietal offering, it's aged in primarily new French oak and shows the heights malbec can scale when yields are reduced and the wine is built for the long haul. Enjoy now with a grilled New York sirloin, or hold onto it for up to 10 years without any problem.

Going Out

OUTSIDE THE BOKX

Fiddling with a napkin, clutching at a water glass, Lou Carrier catalogs his obsession with detail. There's the handpicked playlist for the custom sound system and the silverware—previously only available to Thomas Keller at Napa's French Laundry—special-ordered from Europe. There's the German water glass, curved like a full sail. "It was the glass that was going to work in this room, and I had to have this freaking glass," explains Carrier, a native of Dennis, Mass.

He recently moved back East from Vegas, where he was executive vice president of the Hard Rock Hotel and Casino, a job that put him in charge of everything non-gaming and undoubtedly honed his compulsive capabilities. Now in Newton, he oversees Bokx 109, which he calls "a combination of South Beach and Vegas meets Boston." An expansive pool area evokes Miami, while the spare-no-expense accents—and a bar wall that lights up like a Q*bert board—brings Vegas to mind. Perhaps New England is in the understated dark wood of the decor. "There are some traditional elements to what this restaurant is, but at the same time it's a progressive approach." Carrier points to the floor-to-ceiling glass: "Steakhouses are usually pretty dark, and it's true that windows to a steakhouse are like crosses to a vampire."

The menu is helmed by former Loews Las Vegas chef Evan Percoco, a cook with a cockscomb of highlighted hair now serving up poulet rouge ($28), which his boss calls the Kobe of chicken. "You can't buy a more expensive bird," Carrier assures. The red meats include chicken-fried Kobe ($32) and the restaurant's signature dish, a deconstructed prime rib ($44) called "the 109" (the cut's number in the National Meatpacker's Guide). "I didn't want to be known for prime rib, to be honest," Percoco confesses. "Not that there's anything wrong with that, but we wanted to play with the cut." What may set him apart is a flair for desserts, a skill Percoco nurtured while working as a personal chef to a Saudi prince. There are gourmet versions of the Kit Kat bar and the Devil Dog (both $12). "I wanted to give people something to reminisce about when they leave the restaurant," Percoco says.

Beauty

A NEW TWIST

Throwing your hair back into a ponytail or bun seems like the easiest way to keep it out of your face. And it is. But it's boring, and you know it. Girly and versatile, the braid is a fashionable detail to add to your routine. Try these three ways from James Joseph Salon to dress up jeans or play down a fancy frock in a matter of minutes.

AMANDA KNORR

Hairstyles by Lana Soussan

Braid Headband

1. For this beachy look, use Bumble & Bumble's Surf Spray liberally, crunching and separating hair with fingers. 2. Part hair down the middle. 3. Leave about an inch of hair out of the braid on each side of your face. 4. Section off a piece of hair on each side that goes to the middle of your head and down to an inch above your ear (leaving the hair around your face out). 5. Braid both sections downward and fasten with a clear hair tie at the bottom. 6. Bring one braid over the top of your head and fasten it under the base of the second braid with bobby pins. 7. Now bring the second braid across your head and fasten it to the base of the first braid. Hint: If the one-inch pieces in front look too flat, you can braid them and take them back out for added texture.

Ponytail Braid

1. Smooth out your hair before braiding to get rid of fly-aways using Easy Rider Anti-Frizz Crème. 2. Section off a piece of hair starting from your forehead to the middle of your hairline and an inch or two above the temple (making a rectangle). Hint: People with thicker hair should grab a smaller piece than those with fine hair. 3. Pull the rest of your hair back into a ponytail before braiding to keep it out of the way. 4. Begin braiding the section straight down and fasten it with a small elastic. 5. Depending on your hair's length, you can bobby pin the braid back or tuck it into the ponytail.

Double-Braid Bun

Repeat steps 1. and 2. for the ponytail braid. 3. Section off the remaining hair under your first braid to use it for the second one. 4. Pull the rest of your hair into a ponytail to keep it out of the way. 5. Braid both sections in a backward direction (going toward the ponytail). Hint: Make the braids looser for a messier look, and if it seems too neat, tease the sections for added volume before braiding. 6. Pull the two braids back and fasten them into the ponytail. 7. Begin to wrap your ponytail around the hair tie to create a bun. 8. Fasten it in place with bobby pins.

THE MOLE TRUTH

DEAR MR. SPARKLESS:
So let me break it down for you: If I'm not hot enough for you to date, I'm not hot enough to be your friend. And if you sincerely wanted to be friends, you would have mentioned it a lot sooner instead of pulling your ass-rocket disappearing act. You and I agreed on a lot of things. So here's the last one: You're right, there is no way to suggest being friends without looking like a weasel. But with that excuse you call a nose, you look more like a mole. Which fits you perfectly—because clearly you're blind, you're a rodent, and you belong in the dirt, you shallow turd.

You should be so lucky

To the nameless gentleman who warned me about the shutdown at Sullivan Station last Thursday morning, then paid my cab fare into the city:

Thank you! You saved me, twice: first from an unnecessary walk into chaos and second from what surely must have been a difficult commute, assuming I could have located a shuttle. I'm grateful [that you bothered to] inform me (an impatient stranger) about the news, even though I was barreling down the sidewalk, oblivious to the outside world. I also appreciate your generosity. You not only shared your ride, but you made a detour and then insisted on keeping the bill. These gestures are rare acts of unselfish kindness; clearly, you generate it. Please know you have a fan, not only because I got to work on time, but because you renewed my faith that not all strangers are threats; some are friends we've not yet met.

To the bearded country-clubber boyfriend who is only 19:

It is illegal for you to drink alcohol. You were lamely celebrating your girlfriend's high school graduation at [a] country club—not "being the man" at some frat bar. It is disrespectful to hide your Mass. ID and then show a fake New Hampshire ID to our manager, [and] to persuade your girlfriend's mom to sneak you glasses of red wine during dinner. Next time, don't embarrass yourself by having the manager pull you and the mother aside—and realize your actions are gossiped about behind closed kitchen doors.

On family and furnishings

The Road to Healing

WITH EXQUISITE SPECIFICITY, Jennifer Haigh enters into the minds of the members of the McKotch family in her latest novel. Frank and Paulette, divorced, have three extremely different children: troubled pothead Scott, downwardly mobile from his Concord origins; secretly gay Billy, a doctor; and Gwen. She suffers from Turner Syndrome, which compromises her development, keeping her in the body of a child, awkward and isolated. Frank, her MIT biologist father, explores Gwen's condition from a scientific—but not too human—perspective; Paulette wants to deny the problem, with Gwen at least pseudo-normal. This tension crystallizes their differences, and they separate. With some dramatic and painful intersections over time, the five McKotches lead divergent lives. But they have their brilliant narrator Haigh, who is as sophisticated at showing the shamed Scott bumbling and crashing around his druggy life with a wife from another social class as she is presenting the cabals, academic and romantic, of the research world. This family's richly told disconnections eventually mesh, and Gwen, deep-sea diving, gratifyingly finds love in a rather metaphorical, underwater way.

Cape Cod brings a family together.

Paint the Town Ruby

PRETTY JEWELRY comes blessed with pretty names: lemon citrine, tourmaline, London blue smoky topaz. The aesthetic here involves lots of dramatic, rocky chunkiness, layered necklaces tumbling with stones. Those stones may be beaded, calibrated, faceted or briolette-cut, giving them a textured complexity. One necklace has shiny blue lapis "teeth"; turned over they display a roughly rubbed variation. The Ruby Door invites the bold—like an enormous, queenly bracelet that colonizes the wrist in gold dotted with chalcodony, or an opal necklace with enormous spikes of white coral. Those are balanced by delicate rings encircled with miniature diamonds and other signature engagement pieces. Some involve refreshing, glassy sliced diamonds. Sleeping Beauty turquoise is elegantly clean of the black marks found on the tourist variation. This beautifully decorated shop also sells bejeweled housewares in its recently expanded Beacon Hill space: sparkly agates made into bookends, antique corbels and Katherine Houston's Prussian blue porcelains of garlic and peppers. Blazing pink and blue evening bags enliven both you and your bureau.

The Ruby Door (15 Charles St., Boston; 617-720-2001; therubydoor.com) has taken over neighboring space with home accessories.

Berry Trendy Even non-techies have to admit that the results of this experiment are pretty cool. Riffing off of the wildly popular L.A.-born fro-yo franchise Pinkberry (aka Crackberry), biology post-docs Eric Yang and Matthew Wallace had a hunch that the ice cream alternative would be a sweet addition to Harvard Square. Smart guys. Since BerryLine opened its doors in September, this pint-sized creamery has been churning out gallons of the tangy treat—thick and creamy, it tastes like actual yogurt—piled high with toppings like fresh kiwi, mango and local fruit.

TIME TO SET THE TAVOLO

Douglass opens new Dot eatery.

Chris Douglass is busy, busy, busy. This month his first restaurant, the much-loved Icarus in the South End, is celebrating its 30th birthday—longevity so remarkable it probably equals 200 in dining years. At Ashmont Grill in Dorchester, business is booming: The Monday Night Wine Club often sells out, even though the price of admission is now $30. Plus, Douglass is readying his latest project: Tavolo, a casual Italian place specializing in pizzas, pastas and paninis to open sometime in August at 1900 Dorchester Ave. Executive chef Maxwell Thompson, formerly of Ashmont (and of Café Boulud in Manhattan), will run the kitchen (11 am–11 pm daily).

Tavolo's Chris Douglass

It's just what Richard Gordon wants in his neighborhood: an affordable dinner spot. So he's taken it upon himself to expand his South End Buttery, tripling its size and quadrupling the seating capacity. The new restaurant adds a full bar, two new chefs—Michael Navarrete, formerly at Sorellina, and pastry guru Janessa Tomshick, most recently at Radius—and a commitment to "trying to keep prices under $20" for dishes like roasted Scottish salmon and grilled hanger steak. Also slated to open by August, the bigger, better Buttery will feature lunch and brunch menus.

More from the South End: First came Stella, then came the nifty back room at the Italian hot spot, and now chef/owner Evan Deluty has opened a cafe next to his Washington Street eatery. Open weekdays from 6 am to 6 pm, Stella Café serves breakfast and lunch. Pastries include cupcakes topped with—surprise!—a frosted star. Deluty plans to sell prepared foods as well.

BADA-BING

LETTUCE FEED YOU Ming Tsai delights the Oringers with "the White Castle of Asian cuisine."

WHAT DO YOU DO with a 10-year-old restaurant and the urge to shake things up? If you're Ming Tsai, you remodel. The chef/owner of Blue Ginger shut down his pan-Asian Wellesley spot for a few weeks this spring and reopened a bigger, more beautiful version with a sexy lounge and bar framed by a massive rock fountain. He also took the opportunity to play with a new lounge menu, in which he introduced "Ming's Bings," his riff on Chinese street food (the name says it all, really).

Who better to give them the once-over, I thought, than Ming's close friend, chef Ken Oringer (Clio, Toro, La Verdad and KO Prime)? Knowing that these two had real history, I wasn't surprised to see Ken, his wife, Celine, and Ming chatting it up when I arrived. "We've known each other a long time," Ken told me after we sat down. The two spent the early part of their careers together during a stint at San Francisco's Mandarin Oriental Hotel and later arrived in Boston around the same time. "I was there the night he re-met his wife back in his old bachelor days. It's been a long time." Ken looked around at the redone space, nodding in approval. "After 10 years, even at Clio, it's tough to do the same thing over and over again. He looks like he's having fun with it again."

After ordering a round of high-octane platinum margaritas ($15), our trio started with a table full of Asian snacks, including the chicken lettuce cups ($10), which we assembled into burrito-like form from a platter of lettuce leaves, stir-fried chicken and crispy vermicelli. Ming instructed us: "Take a little of this, a little of that and roll it all up." The crispy crab Rangoon ($10) personified the theme of Ming's WGBH cooking show, East Meets West, which he'd just finished taping. The Eastern-inspired Rangoons, filled with shredded snow-crab meat, got a sharp hit of tartness from the American cranberry chutney—two unlikely worlds colliding into perfect, deep-fried harmony. Ken declared them "a-ma-zing."

As we picked through a dish of soy-and-yuzu–glazed edamame ($4), Celine and Ken bantered back and forth about their recent attempts to make Toro a completely green restaurant. "We're composting; we've already reduced our garbage. And all of our take-out materials are compostable," Celine told me, but then lamented the fact that the government has offered very few incentives to assist their (or any eatery's) efforts toward sustainability.

"You should talk to Deval about it," Ken chimed in.

"Are you guys friendly with Deval Patrick?" I asked.

"Oh yeah," Celine said, rolling her eyes. "We go way back."

"She's kidding," Ken said. "We had dinner at [his] house last summer."

"Did he cook?" I asked.

"No," Ken said. "Actually, we were both so intimidated, we hardly took a bite of our food."

Not the case tonight. We each ordered a platter of bings—a huge amount of food ($10 for a combo of three). Ming came by to give us some background. "'Bing,' in Chinese, could be a lot of things. It could mean dumpling or pancake, sort of like bread does here," he said. "But these are like a fast-food, street-food version." His bings were fat, round, patty-like dumplings that were crisped on the edges but, when sliced, ran with flavor-packed juices. Inside were meaty portions of gingered pork and scallions, braised red-roast duck, or a bacon, blue cheese and ground beef (cheeseburger) filling. There was also a vegetarian version with mushrooms, tofu and mung beans. A spicy house-made sweet chili dipping sauce arrived with each plate. "I'm a traditionalist; I love the pork," Ken said. When Ming stopped by later to see how we were doing, Ken blurted out: "They're like the White Castle of Asian cuisine." Ming let out a loud laugh. "Dude, I wish it was as good as White Castle!"

The conversation moved toward Ken's 7 am boot camp workout on the Charles River. "I've never been on the river that early; not even after a late night of stumbling around. It's beautiful," he said. At that, our Eastern-inspired dessert arrived: toasted-sesame ice cream sandwiched between two dense chocolate cookies ($7). One or two bites into it, Ken said, "There's no way I can finish it." A bite or two later, he conceded. "OK, why not? I am running two miles tomorrow." ✖✖✖

DON'T GO CHASING WATERHALLS

Please, for the love of all that's cool, keep city government at bay.

AT LAST YEAR'S "Dancing With the Stars of Boston" benefit, I adopted the persona of the quasi-insane TV critic Bruno Tonioli, and one of my fellow judges was Mayor Menino. This year I went with a stoned-out falsetto and attempted to channel Paula Abdul, but I probably came off more as a sedated Boy George. Menino opted out of the judging this time, but showed up after the dancing was over and took the stage to address the audience. At one point, he turned to me and asked, "So, Erzera—were you funny?" I leaned into my mike and replied, "No." Menino shot back, "Well, same as last year, I guess." Aw, snap. Zinged by the mayor. It was like we'd honed our repartee through years on the road together, me judging dance contests while impersonating deranged celebrities, him working the audience and adding several extra syllables to my name.

I like Menino, and I'd probably vote for him based purely on our shared hatred for parking space–savers. It's a local Southie tradition so abused that I'm surprised there isn't a toilet sitting in a prime spot outside my building right now, since someone did a lot of work shoveling that spot just five months ago. Unlike me, Menino has the ability to call out the trash trucks to confiscate people's cones. I love it when the trash trucks come out. I sometimes dream I have such power.

But, like most slapstick comedy duos, the mayor and I don't see eye-to-eye on every creative issue. Most notably, the topic of City Hall. The Globe recently reported that the city budget has sneaky money allocated for scouting a spot on the South Boston waterfront for a new City Hall. Building a new City Hall there makes about as much sense as building a giant courthouse on the most prime piece of waterfront in the city, so that the only people who get to enjoy it are people who work there and criminals. What? We already did that? Bad example.

Now, I'm not a NIMBY. I live in Southie a few blocks from a giant power plant that is probably going to cause my children to have five testicles, or more if they're boys. But here's the basic, irrefutable problem with the City Hall–on-the-water idea: The waterfront should be fun, and there's nothing less fun than City Hall. I don't care if the new City Hall has a topless blackjack parlor and a mechanical bull—nobody goes to City Hall unless they work there or have some soul-crushing bit of administrative business to conduct. And the Boston waterfront is already lame enough as it is.

The waterfront should be fun, and there's nothing less fun than City Hall.

A few months ago I made an impulse purchase of a book about turn-of-the-century Southie, expecting it to be filled with photos of squalid apartments and street urchins and sooty factories and back-alley cockfights hosted by dudes who look like the chimney sweep from Mary Poppins. I was highly dismayed, then, to find that Old Tyme Southie was, in many ways, superior to the modern version. There was a giant German beer garden at the shore, and a couple of hundred yards away was Kelly's Landing restaurant, out on a pier with a public dock. Trolleys ran down Broadway right to the beach. Happy citizens frolicked in the water, wearing their contemporary bathing costumes, sporting finely waxed moustaches, and happily swimming around and catching polio. But you know what wasn't on the waterfront in those utopian years, besides a functional sewage treatment plant? City Hall, that's what.

Look, I don't blame the mayor for wanting to ditch his current digs. City Hall is a barbaric structure that looks like it was designed to break the spirit of visiting communists. The only people who think City Hall is cool are the sorts of architects who design chairs with two legs. But that's the way I like it. I enjoy the fact that registering for a parking sticker makes me feel like I've breached the defenses of the Death Star. Look at it this way, City Hall employees: You could remodel the inside of the building—put in some granite counters and whatnot—and then, who cares about the exterior? You're not the ones looking at it. And if that theory didn't have some validity, nobody would've bought a Pontiac Aztec.

While it seems that many city council members agree with my own City Hall sentiments, I'm very afraid, because Menino tends to get what he wants. I just wish that what he wanted was a German beer garden. Maybe I'll have to tell some hippies that a rare tern lives on Drydock 4, so they'll go down there and chain themselves to a piling to prevent construction. Although that would probably be futile. We know how Menino deals with space-savers, and if that tactic didn't end with hippies getting thrown in garbage trucks, then my name's not Erzera. ✖✖✖

AINGE COMES UP ACES

Time to add another number to the rafters

IN THE SPRING OF 2002, the Boston Celtics appeared to be back. They were up two games to one against the New Jersey Nets in the Eastern Conference Finals. They had momentum following the biggest fourth-quarter comeback in playoff history (down 21 points in Game 3). Paul Pierce was a hero. Antoine Walker, at least for a few minutes, was beloved. Celtics success had returned. The Los Angeles Lakers, with Shaquille O'Neal and Kobe Bryant, were next on the docket.

It was the 1980s all over again. But it was a mirage—fool's gold. The Nets won four straight and then were swept by the Lakers. And it wasn't long before the Celtics were back to being pretenders. It was time for a change.

The change happened the following year during the 2003 playoff run, when there were few, if any, expectations for the Celtics. A rumor was running through the Meadowlands in New Jersey. After hearing it, I remember everyone scrambling to locate former Celtic guard Danny Ainge, who was in attendance working as a broadcaster. As the story had gotten out prematurely, Ainge imitated

Danny Ainge did his job better than anyone expected.

Muhammad Ali and played rope-a-dope with reporters, but it was soon official. Ainge was returning to Boston to fix the franchise that he loved.

While many New Englanders clamored for Larry Bird to save the day, we had to settle for Ainge. These stories are nice—a former star comes back home to rekindle what's been missing. Ainge's commitment to basketball has always been there. Even as a Major League Baseball prospect with the Blue Jays, he would make visits to Syracuse to play hoops with the Orangemen all the time. As former Red Sox pitching coach Dave Wallace remembers, Ainge was a "great raw talent, but he was just focused on a completely different game."

The best architect in basketball, Red Auerbach, maneuvered Ainge away from the Blue Jays. Auerbach drafted the guard even though Ainge had an ironclad contract forbidding him from playing any sport other than baseball. Auerbach eventually went to court and paid the Blue Jays to change their mind. Ainge took note of Auerbach's shrewdness, and it's only fitting that in the Celtics' return to glory, he'd be just as coy as the former Celtics patriarch. Assembling the new Big Three was a coup, and some say he got a giant assist from old Big Three teammate Kevin McHale by acquiring another great Kevin, Mr. Garnett.

He brought in players who didn't care about stats.

After the Game 6 massacre, with the green and white confetti falling at the TD Banknorth Garden, I found Ainge, who just minutes before had appeared on the JumboTron. Not ready to celebrate, he'd remained stone-faced, even as the Celtics were up almost 40 points with about five minutes remaining. "My son nudged me and told me I was up on the JumboTron," said Ainge. "There is a time and a place to celebrate and now was not that time. Not yet."

But his team was going crazy. It was a party on the Celtics bench for the last 10 minutes of the game. "Just watching the smiles on the players' faces, and I'm happy for Doc, that was fun," Ainge admitted.

When it was over, he couldn't hold back. "It's an unbelievable time for me and my family," he said. "This season has been so much fun, especially seeing Paul [Pierce] having his time after all he has been through."

I didn't think it was possible a year ago. Nobody did. But after a summer of wheeling and dealing, taking pages out of Red's playbook, everything had changed by October. This roster was unlike any other we'd seen since Bird left town. We had Pierce, Garnett, Ray Allen and James Posey, to name a few. Of course, there were other key ingredients, including Doc Rivers, who was finally going to be able to coach rather than teach. A championship became a distinct possibility, and throughout the season that expectation never changed. The Celtics were the best team from wire to wire, just like we'd been used to for so many years.

When Ainge came to Boston, new general partner Wyc Grousbeck suggested that if he brought a championship back to the Garden, maybe they'd retire his number, too. Well, Ainge did his job better than anyone expected. He brought in players who didn't care about stats; they only cared about winning. He kept his part of the bargain. After banner No. 17 is officially raised to the rafters it will be time to raise another number—44—up there, too. ✖✖✖

WHAT IN THE NAME OF BENJARVUS GREEN-ELLIS?

5 (+1) QUESTIONS WITH SCAL-A-BRINE!

On June 25, Brian Scalabrine and Tony Allen spent the day in Washington, D.C., with a group of eighth graders from the Grover Cleveland Middle School, who won the trip through the Southwest Assists Community Service Contest. We tagged along, and after a whirlwind tour of the city, Scal sat down with us for a quick interview.

Take Five: Have you noticed anything different in KG since winning the title? Has he relaxed at all?
Brian Scalabrine: KG is the same when he's chilling with us off the court as he is right now. He's just happy. But when KG plays in practices and games he's a different dude, and I'll always expect him to be a different dude. He's the most intense guy I've ever played with. He'll play 38 minutes the night before and then bring it in practice. You can't get him off the court. I've played with a lot of superstars and never imagined I'd see anything like him.

TF: Doc Rivers received his share of criticism this year, but obviously he got it done. How do the players see Doc as a coach?
BS: The biggest thing he did was manage the team. It's easy for people to be like, "Oh, look at that team. They're so talented," but one of the hardest things to do is manage that talent and manage all the egos and get us all on the same page—and that's what he did.

TF: You're picking teams for an all-Celtics pickup game: Who's your first choice?
BS: I've got a great answer for you. I'm taking Rajon Rondo, because then no matter who they take I still have the edge. I've got the only point guard.

TF: Favorite hoops movie of all time?
BS: Heaven Is a Playground is one of my favorite movies of all time. It's very cheesy, with DB Sweeney in it, but you also got guest appearances by Kendall Gill and Hakeem Olajuwon.

TF: Who plays you in The Brian Scalabrine Story?
BS: Well, I don't think the actor who would play me is good enough to do it if I'm the lead role, but if you did a movie about the Celtics and I was in it, it would definitely be Michael Rapaport. He's not ready for the lead, though.

TF: Tell us about your main goal going on a trip like this.
BS: Anytime I do anything with kids, the main goal is to help them realize that professional athletes are real people, too. I love just coming and hanging out with these kids. When I was young, where I grew up, people always gave me a chance, and now I'm just paying it forward.

4 First-Half Sox Honors

MVP The following question sounds like it came from an alternate and perverse universe, but we have to ask: How many more games behind Tampa Bay would the Red Sox be without JD Drew? With more home runs in June than he had all of last season, Drew is well on his way to erasing any memory of 2007. Next up: Sam Cassell, your 2009 NBA Finals MVP!

LVP Hideki Okajima seems like a pretty likable dude, but he's been god-awful. Heathcliff Slocumb awful. BK Kim awful. The Sox need someone to bridge the gap to Papelbon. Is it too late to trade two solid prospects to the Brewers for Eric Gagne?

The Late, Great John Marzano Award for Heroics During a Brawl We don't know if you can call missing on a punch and getting jumped by four guys heroic, but Coco Crisp's Mike Tyson's Punch Out dodge of Jamie Shields' haymaker has got to be good for something. Coco's split-second maneuver earned him a lifelong title of badass in The Improper Book of Random Labels.

The Sad Realization Award At press time, there are 15 MLB catchers with 200 or more plate appearances. Of those 15, Jason Varitek ranks 15th in average, 14th in OBP, OPS, hits and runs, and 12th in slugging percentage. But apparently, he still ranks first in "managing pitching staffs." (Note: It's impossible to write something negative about 'Tek and not feel really bad, and dropping this line makes us feel slightly better).

3 DATES TO WATCH

7/14 David Ortiz was supposed to be at Yankee Stadium tonight to call his shot in the Home Run Derby. Papi will still be in the Bronx, but because of his injury, the game has been changed to Ortiz predicting how many times Chris Berman says, "Back, back, back!" before we all watch the Derby on mute.

7/17 Before you go booking your flight to England for the British Open, remember that Tiger won't be taking the trip, leaving John Daly's body odor and Phil Mickelson's moobs as the only attractions at Royal Birkdale.

7/24 It's time to officially put the Feb. 3 nightmares behind us, as the Pats kick off training camp this morning at Gillette. If you're heading down, drive another mile south on Route 1 for a new attraction: Wacky Willie Andrews' Stolen Hub Caps for $1 Shack.

2 FUTURE HEADLINES FOR MANNY

Ramirez Punches Mirror... The Projo's Sean McAdam is reporting that a fight erupted in the Red Sox locker room this afternoon when Manny Ramirez cold-cocked a mirror in the bathroom. "I was trying to shave after my shower," Ramirez explained, "but the guy inside the mirror wouldn't move out of the way." The Sox have decided not to pick up his contract option for at least seven years.

Manny Dropkicks the Green Monster... Interesting scene at Fenway today, as Derek Jeter hit a fly ball to left field, which bounced off the very top of the Green Monster and into the stands for a home run. An enraged Manny Ramirez responded by delivering a flying scissor kick to the scoreboard and screaming, "Do your job!" over and over before being removed by security.

ONE ROUND OF THE NAME GAME

Did you know the Patriots have a rookie running back in training camp named BenJarvus Green-Ellis—which remarkably features the entire name of one Pats star sandwiched between the first names of two others? We don't even know where to go with this, except to think up our favorite Patriot name combination. So, after much deliberation, here it is: AdaliusDan Koppen-Le Kevin.

DROPKICK MURPHYS

Boston's Best Rockers

By ANDREW RIMAS Photograph by KERRY BRETT

DESPITE THEIR TASTE for tattoos and squalling guitars, the Dropkick Murphys are as conservative as bishops. Around since 1996, the Celtic punk band romanticizes a vanished Boston: the city that was working-class Irish, loyal to clan and baseball team, raring to fight—from the Battle of Antietam to the mayor's office. The Dropkicks (including new recruit Jeff DaRosa, who replaced Marc Orrell this year) wear nostalgia on a pierced leather sleeve.

"There's just so many good stories and characters that have come out of this place," says co-founder and vocalist Ken Casey. "It's in the Irish musical tradition to preserve traditions and tell stories about families and lives." The group's subjects are bare-knuckle boxers, political bosses and local drunks, with the Red Sox a particular specialty ("Tessie" needs no introduction). Casey is even co-owner of McGreevy's 3rd Base Saloon, a resurrected 19th-century baseball bar billed as "the birthplace of Red Sox Nation." If Beantown has a soul, it showed its face at the 2007 World Series victory parade when the band slammed into the opening chords of "Shipping Up to Boston," immortalized in The Departed, while Jonathan Papelbon danced in a kilt.

"What other type of music could you play for kids you grew up with, to grandparents?" asks Casey. At the first McGreevy's show, the audience included former senate president Billy Bulger, as well as punksters barely old enough to buy a beer. That's why the Dropkicks are Boston's Best Rockers, on tour this summer supporting their 2007 release, The Meanest of Times. International fame and hobnobbing with sports heroes haven't changed the fact that these are seven guys from the neighborhood, singing about the city they love. ✖✖✖

At the Dropkick Murphys shoot for this issue, we harassed the band to write a song for us—something to add a little edge to the overall love fest that's Boston's Best. During his downtime, Ken Casey was kind enough to scribble this out, his tongue-in-cheek take on reaching the top. He offered to work on it some more and do a recording. See dropkickmurphys.com/news for an acoustic demo around July 11.

THE BEST THINGS IN LIFE ARE FREE.

TAKE THIS MAGAZINE, FOR INSTANCE. But then there are the ones you have to pay for, which is hardly as fun, especially in tough economic times. Luckily, you have this, our 17th annual Boston's Best Issue, to help point your dollars in the right direction.

"Best" doesn't necessarily mean "most expensive." The world is full of overpriced mediocrity, from over-hyped food to haughty sales clerks to inflated bills. What's most alarming, though, is that we, as Bostonians, live in a service economy, and good service is sometimes as hard to find as tits on a bull.

So rather than allowing you — our savvy, discerning readers — to suffer the indignity of patronizing a subpar establishment, we compile our yearly guide to the finest the city has to offer. Because we live in one of the world's finest cities, though, singling out the winners is a Herculean task.

That's why we get other people to do it for us. We assemble a motley crew of cognoscenti (see photo on page 142) at a dinner party which took place at Mooo in its subterranean-yet-out-of-this-stratosphere wine cellar. To the excellent setting we add the social lubricants of food and drink, and then ask our guests to vote on their favorite restaurants, shops, services, etc.

We'd like to thank all of them, as well as the contributors, interns and staffers who worked their butts to the bone. In addition to tallying votes, they had to weed out conflicts of interest, research and write the whole thing. It's a major undertaking but also a major resource.

So we hope you enjoy our 2008 Boston's Best Issue. No need to thank us for it. We know you're the best audience The Improper could have.

BOSTON'S BEST

51 Lincoln

CHEF JEFFREY FOURNIER PLAYS with art both on the plate and on the wall—he painted everything hanging at his Newton Highlands restaurant. His creative side finds gastronomical expression in pairings like pulled pork (Fournier buys and butchers two to three pigs a week) with a shot of cilantro vodka, while the art is naturally framed by the room's autumnal tones and creamy leather banquettes. Not even the drive from Boston will keep you from making this a regular hangout.

51 Lincoln St., Newton, 617-965-3100, 51lincolnnewton.com

AMERICAN
Union Bar and Grille

As other restaurants in the oh-so-trendy South End spiral into new ethnic territories, Union Bar and Grille remains perfectly at ease with its American menu. Union touts classics like the 10K Tuna, the pan-roasted chicken with corn bread and chorizo stuffing, and an unforgettable burger made from a blend of ground beef and andouille sausage. After such heart-warming comfort fare, the massive black-leather booths look perfect for a nap. Weekend brunch is also a winner.

1357 Washington St., Boston, 617-423-0555, unionrestaurant.com

BAGELS
Bagel Rising

It's 3 am. All the Comm. Ave. college kids are stumbling back to their apartments. Down the block, Larry Margulies and his bagel-baking crew are getting breakfast ready for the throngs of 20-somethings that will line up later that morning. But don't be deceived by their clientele; this hippie hole-in-the-wall's mainstay isn't merely a booze sponge. Bagel Rising boasts 17 versions of the carb classic and 20 types of schmears, including sun-dried tomato and tofu. Their namesake egg-wich is reason enough to rise to the occasion.

BAKERY: BREAD
Iggy's Bread of the World

What do Clio and the Walpole Big Y have in common? A daily invoice from Iggy's tacked on the wall. It's hard to believe the business that Igor and Ludmilla Ivanovic started in their garage now supplies much of New England's daily bread. But fans—Ken Oringer included—can vouch that the old-world quality remains. Their Francese—a topseller in local supermarkets—still sports the same crispy crust and sour chew it did the day the Bongard French baker's oven was installed at Iggy's old Watertown storefront. The only difference? Now you can find one just about anywhere, whether at their 33,000-square-foot boulangerie in Cambridge or at your local Whole Foods.

130 Fawcett St., Cambridge, 617-924-0949, iggysbread.com

Party Favors

Chef/owner John Pergantis doesn't call his sweet shop the "House of Butter" for nothing. In order to bake the hundreds of cakes and cupcakes they churn out every week, Pergantis, his wife, Mary Lynn, and their 20-some staffers spend more on the butter bill than they do powering the lights and ovens. The options seem endless—cake, filling and frosting flavors tally in the double digits—but Pergantis considers these jumping-off points. If you're crippled by indecision, you can't go wrong choosing the almond cake with chocolate-raspberry mousse and dark-chocolate ganache.

BAKERY: COOKIES
Mike's Pastry

More than 50 varieties and still counting. Everyone fusses over those crisp cannoli tubes piped with fresh ricotta or custard cream (and they should—they're the best in the city), but the bulk of this North End landmark's pastry case is actually dedicated to macaroons (try pistachio), Florentines, lace-like pizelles, crunchy biscotti and other sweet treats. Lines are long, the staff is often sassy—note: be ready to order, be assertive, and when you can't decide, just get both—but that's all part of the charm. Besides, where else do they sell cookies by the pound?

300 Hanover St., Boston, 617-742-3050, mikespastry.com

BAKERY: CUPCAKES
Kickass Cupcakes

In cities like New York and Los Angeles, cupcake bakeries seem as ubiquitous as Starbucks. Thanks to Sara Ross and her Davis Square business, Boston is catching up. Not only did Ross treat Boston to our first such shop, but she sweetened the deal with outside-the-box treats like dollar cupcake shooters (bar shots, only with sugar on your arm and one-gulp cups of vanilla-infused milk), sundae-inspired parfaits, and decadent cream-filled confections that she deep fries and drizzles with chocolate syrup. Also kickass: They deliver.

378 Highland Ave., Somerville, 617-628-2877, kickasscupcakes.com

BAKERY: DOUGHNUTS
Betty Ann Food Shop

Bet you can count on one hand the number of things 40 cents would buy. A small box of nails. Half a pack of gum. One-tenth of a gallon of regular unleaded—if you're lucky. Well, here's one more: the best doughnut in Boston. This bare-bones bakeshop fries up the same no-nonsense flavors—puffy cruellers, crispy rings laced with nutmeg, and spheres stuffed with red-currant jam—it has since 1931. It's as if the huge chrome clock on the wall hasn't ticked once in three generations. The only catch? You've gotta rise with the sun to snag one. The little old ladies out back get the oil going in the wee hours and close shop well before noon—or sooner, if they've sold out. And no pennies, please.

565 Bennington St., Boston, 617-567-1479

BAKERY: HIDDEN GEM
Joseph's Bakery and Deli

We must be on the set of As Good As It Gets. Warm rolls at 4 am—who knew Boston even had such a bakery? Southie residents did. Forty-three years ago at their corner store, Joseph and Carmela Masciave started baking a dozen different house-made breads, as well as fruit and cheese Danishes, coffee cakes, muffins and fine Italian pastries. It's one of those true family operations; not only were the couple's two daughters reared from cradle to kitchen in the bakery's back room, the girls now run the sweet side of the shop while their aunt Frances manages the adjoining deli with her children. Nothing satisfies quite like one of their veal Parmesan subs or fresh-baked calzones, but you'd best get in line early. Hidden or not, this gem is a hot spot.

BAKERY: PASTRIES
Flour Bakery + Cafe

As far as treats go, you haven't experienced perfect timing until you stumble through the door at Flour just as a huge tray of gooey sticky buns is coming out of the oven. Those yeasty curls of dough dripping with dark caramel and toasted pecans sound the siren call of Joanne Chang's enticing roster of breakfast pastries. Other standouts include brioche baked three ways and thick slabs of Chang's nationally acclaimed banana-nut loaf.

BAR FOOD
Matt Murphy's

Irish-American public houses set the bar high when it comes to pulling a proper pint of stout or cider, but they tend to take unfortunate food cues from the frozen aisle. Feck that. Who needs nachos and chicken fingers when you can sink a fork into the kind of first-rate fare Siobhan Carew serves at her rustic Brookline Village watering hole? Traditionalists will take comfort in her velvety potato-leek potage and authentic shepherd's pie—we're talking hunks of braised lamb, not ground beef—while those craving a more inspired pairing for their draught can munch on crisp cod fritters, slow-roasted half-duckling sauced with plums or hand-cut fries with tangy house-made ketchup.

BARBECUE
Blue Ribbon

When Geoff Janowski's brother came north from Virginia and couldn't find any good barbecue, the siblings' next move was obvious: build a custom smoker. They've been making Memphis ribs and other piles of meat at this suburban sauce pit for the past 13 years. Lone Star loyalists can get their fix from peppery slices of brisket, but it's the shreddy, Kansas City–style burnt brisket ends and house-made pickles that really have this Yankee town fired up.

BISTRO
Craigie Street Bistrot

"You're at Craigie Street, so you've gotta have some pork," announced chef/owner Tony Maws as he hand-delivered the fifth course of his Wednesday whim. That night, diners supped on a harmonious triad of Vermont baby pork in addition to local monkfish studded with house-made Chinese sausage coins. Maws takes pride in peppering pig throughout his modern, market-fresh menu, but he wields an equally steady hand with finely tuned accoutrements like pin-thin white asparagus spears, velvety farro verde and brisk lemon verbena ice cream over mango-rhubarb crisp. Maws will have roomier digs to showcase his innovative creations when his much-anticipated Craigie on Main opens in Central Square.

BRAZILIAN
Midwest Grill

Carnivores unite at this Brazilian-style skewered meat fest. Sure there's a salad bar, but why waste room in your belly when there are cheerful waiters wandering around slicing chunks of smoky pork loin, kielbasa and roasted chicken hearts right onto your plate? Here's a tip: Don't take too much of one thing; you'll regret it when the next sword-carrying server comes around. There's also a small but delicious selection of South American wines.

BREAKFAST
The Paramount

The way this cafe whips up picture-perfect omelets and sturdy egg-and-cheese sandwiches, you'll have no trouble believing they've been doing it for 70 years. The space has been through some changes, but its cafeteria-style setup and quick in-and-out service still draw crowds, who are prohibited from saving seats before ordering. Midweek, when the line dwindles slightly, is the best time to get in early for a stack of buttermilk pancakes or malted Belgian waffles. Just be sure to arrive before 3 pm (or 4 pm on Sundays), when breakfast service stops.

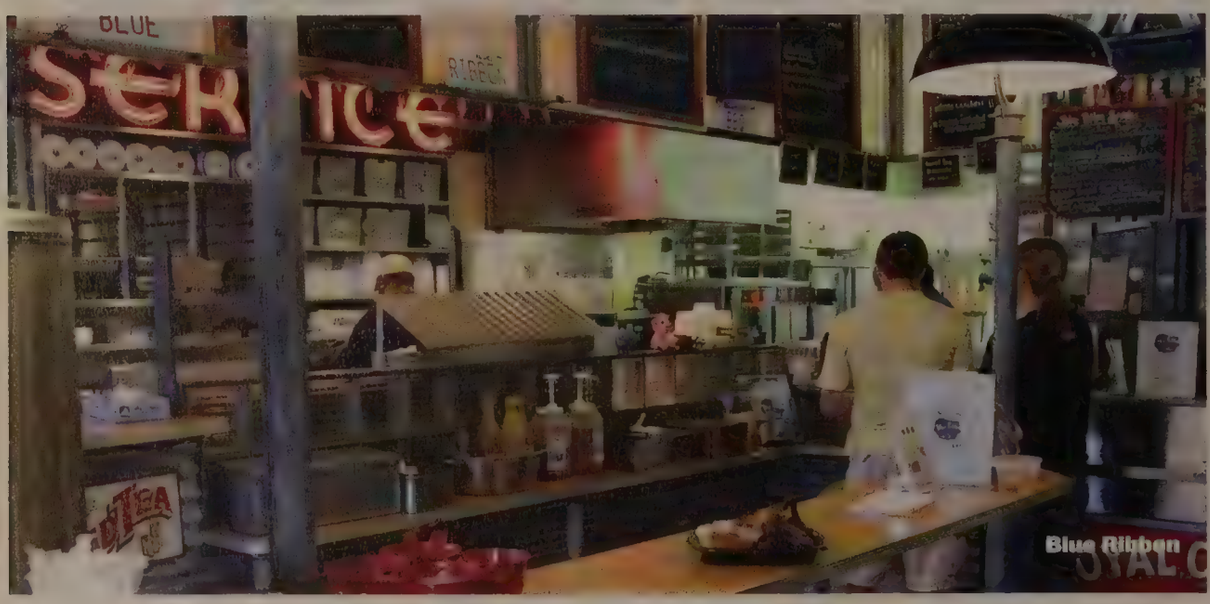
BRUNCH
Henrietta's Table

Tucked into a corner of the Charles Hotel, Henrietta's Table has garnered quite a fan base, not only for chef Peter Davis' fanatical dedication to sourcing from local farmers but also for his superb weekend brunches. Saturday features an à la carte menu, while Henrietta's serves a buffet on Sunday. Choosing between the many raw bar options, decadent pâtés, terrines and customized omelets will be your biggest challenge, so why not try it all? Knowing that just about everything comes from a nearby farm makes plunking down $45 more bearable.

Charles Hotel, 1 Bennett St., Cambridge, 617-661-5005, henriettastable.com



BURGER
Miracle of Science Bar & Grill

This city has its share of famous burgers, pricey burgers and, yes, down-and-dirty burgers. But the best burger? Miracle of Science puts forth a bold and meaty creation. Try the Ronnie: a thick and juicy slab of beef dotted with jalapeños and a melted layer of oozy cheese. It's all framed by a thick, yeasty roll and a tangy pickle on the side. Be sure to wash it down with one of the stellar beers on tap.

321 Mass. Ave., Cambridge, 617-868-2866

BURRITO
Anna's Taqueria
Boston's blessed with numerous burrito joints, but Anna's still rules the roost. Their snappy fill-it-and-fold-it system yields a manageable wrap stuffed with whatever you could possibly crave (they're flexible with picky orders, too). Whether it's the moist dark chicken, the silky refried beans or the zingy spice of the al pastor, their ingredients and quick service always deliver.

CAPPUCCINO
Caffé Vittoria
Soy cappuccino with one pump vanilla and half foam: Say what? At Hanover Street's legendary jazz-age cafe, the barista won't brew you a fussier drink than a caffe macchiato, and the tubular, old-school espresso machine gleams with the polish of a 10-piece band. Their cappuccino is perfect in its simplicity, brewed from robust Illy espresso and steaming milk, crowned with frothy foam and liberally dusted with a shower of sweet cocoa. Try it topped with a shot of whipped cream for a caloric splurge. And if you never sip without a nibble, order some cannoli or tiramisu.

CHEAP EATS
Super 88 Food Court
Banh mi: a superfood for poor college kids and gourmands alike. At Pho Viet, you can slide a dozen quarters across the counter in return for a toasty Saigonese sub so stuffed with pickled vegetables, pork pâté, hot peppers and a protein of choice (grilled pork and fried tofu are particularly tasty), it can be stretched into two meals. All for the price of a load of laundry. So long as you dig dining hall–style supping, there are other delicious deals to be had at the Super 88 Food Court. House-made dumplings at the Dim Sum Chef won't run you more than three bucks a pop.

1 Brighton Ave., Allston, super88market.com

CHINESE: NEW FAVE
Myers + Chang
We never thought Chinese food could be trendy, but chef/owner Joanne Chang has managed a creative menu that puts new ingredients into some long-standing favorites. Traditional dishes like Tiger's Tears and beef and broccoli get updated twists from hits of Thai basil, coconut milk and mint; the tea-smoked pork spare ribs literally fall off the bone; and dumplings, including the pork and chive, come straight out of Chang's mother's recipe box. Even with the family-style setup, you'll leave feeling very happily stuffed.

CHINESE: OLD FAVE
Bernard's
The business owners at the Mall at Chestnut Hill know it. And so do a few of the shoppers, local moms and even an errant city dweller or two. They know that Bernard's is one of the best-kept secrets this side of Brookline. Located in the mall, the restaurant may as well be set in Chinatown with its delightfully simple menu of fresh, non-greasy items and refined dining room. If you can take the heat, there's crispy shrimp in garlic sauce; if you can't, the steamed shu mai are also full of shrimp and hot-water–shocked veggies.

The Mall at Chestnut Hill, Chestnut Hill, 617-969-3388

COCKTAIL TREND
Infusions
The cocktail and culinary worlds have long intermingled, but how to best meld the neutral playground of one with the rich flavors of the other? Infusions. Bartenders mix things up by using more and more combinations. Our favorites include the sweet blueberry-infused gin at Eastern Standard. Toro spices up tequila by soaking hibiscus in it; over at Tremont 647, the Bloody Mary gets a boost with vegetable-infused vodka. And at Rialto, the bartenders cook up a sassy strawberry-and-rhubarb–infused pisco. All you have to do is drink it in.

COFFEE SHOP
South End Buttery
News of South End Buttery's expansion got locals in a twitter about the possibility of more seating and bistro fare. But having it open for dinner won't detract from this homey shop's welcoming morning routine. Seats on the patio or along the bank of windows are prime for people watching (make way for dogs and strollers), and the coffees—whether amped up over ice or plainly poured into a cup—are brewed strong and full of flavor, revving you for the day.

DELI
Zaftig's
Zaftig's has the basics covered, but it's the nontraditional favorites that draw the crowd to this Coolidge Corner landmark—namely brisket-topped potato latkes, pastrami or chopped liver on pumpernickel, and the legendary date-buttered, banana-stuffed pancakes. If the modernized menu isn't enough to convince you this isn't your average Jewish deli, get a load of the waitstaff's pun-loving T-shirt slogans: Knish Me, Happy Challahdays and Tzimmes Down.

DIM SUM
Hei La Moon
If you think the Sunday brunch lines are long at the delis and greasy spoons around town, beware the crowds spilling out the door at Hei La Moon. But don't be deterred; there are two huge floors that ensure you won't be waiting very long even during peak periods. Loosely translated from Cantonese, "dim sum" means "to touch your heart" or, more significantly here, "order to your heart's content"—which is exactly what patrons of this famed

COMFORT FOOD
Hungry Mother

CROSS JULIA CHILD'S Mastering the Art of French Cooking with Mary Randolph's The Virginia Housewife, and you'll get an idea of the food this Kendall Square restaurant serves. Virginia native and chef/co-owner Barry Maiden prepares down-home Southern cuisine using the refined elegance of French technique. A must-order are his collard greens, infused with the taste of smoked ham hocks. Other stellar treats in this cozy converted abode include bottomless mason jars of sweet tea, house-smoked meats (don't miss the succulent chicken sausage or the bacon chips accessorizing the creamy deviled eggs), shrimp and grits, and bourbon-braised pork shoulder.

DINER
Mike's City Diner

You've gotta wonder how many MDs from Boston Medical Center frequent this local diner after a long shift to dig into calorific house specials like the "Emergency Room" and "Intensive Care." Or maybe the crew at Mike's is just joking about how their overstuffed platter of eggs, pancakes, breakfast meat, potatoes and toast guarantees what your next meal will look like—aka an IV tube and a cup of Jell-O. Well, so be it. Come Saturday morning, this black-and-white–checkered institution griddles some of the best (and surely the biggest—they're plate-sized) buttermilk pancakes, locally famous cinnamon-walnut Belgian waffles and eggs alongside hand-carved ham (this is the South End, after all).

DINNER WITH LIVE MUSIC
The Beehive

For local jazz and blues lovers, there are only two eras: pre-Beehive and post-Beehive. Music fans are grateful for the distinction. Inside the massive speakeasy-like space, chef Rebecca Newell's playful bar snacks and comfort-food entrees are just the right complement to whatever jazz, blues or soul-inspired band performs that night. And despite the crowds (which take the space over every weekend around 9 pm), the bartenders are always quick with a cocktail.

FOOD TREND
Small Plates

The hubbub over tapas has quieted down, but small plates still abound in this city. They're in the form of Asian-inspired appetizers, fusion nibbles, shareable Chinese platters and, yes, even some Spanish entries. American versions appear at Small Plates in Cambridge, where Cajun braised rabbit and blue cheese raclette are just a few bites each. Myers + Chang brought a Chinese, Thai and Vietnamese version to the South End, offering all of its flavor-packed dishes in small portions. Up the street at Banq, the Asian amuse-bouche menu, which includes a fire-charred sea scallop and baby beet salad, can whet the appetite before a substantial meal or collectively make one on its own.

FRENCH
L'Espalier

James Beard Award winner Frank McClelland may be moving this Back Bay institution to the Mandarin Oriental this fall, but as long as we can dine on his exquisitely prepared French-meets–modern–New England cuisine, we're happy. Depending on the season, it might mean delicately composed salads of local greens and herbs grown on the restaurant's rooftop, or his whimsical interpretations of classic French specialties like roast rack of lamb encrusted with almonds and served with Chantenay carrot purée. Each dish is served by the formal but welcoming staff, making the dining experience one of the best in town. An added bonus: The city's most entertaining weeknight wine and cheese events take place here on a monthly basis.

Here's a bargain for you: How about investing a cool $10,000 right now in Lionette's Market in exchange for two years' worth of weekly prix-fixe shopping sprees at Tremont Street's greenest grocer? The Lionette brothers, who are about to take the reins from their retiring parents, hope you'll help them jump-start Boston's first Community Supported Market—their riff on locally popular Community Supported Agriculture

GREEK
Greek Corner

There are a dozen reasons to love the Greek Corner. Not only is it one of the few authentic Greek restaurants in town, but you can always find a table inside the welcoming two-room spot (parking is another story). It carries the city's best and densest gyros, as well as flaky spanakopita and layered pastitso (baked beef and macaroni). Family-owned for almost 20 years, Greek Corner is a neighborhood fave.

HIDDEN GEM
Pete's Dockside

If you're not looking for this tucked-away breakfast and lunch spot, you might not find it. Set beside a warehouse in South Boston, Pete's Dockside is a serious little diner with great big dishes, like the Barnyard Breakfast made with three scrambled eggs, sausage and cheddar, as well as thoughtfully crafted subs served inside crusty French bread. There are also delicious domed fish cakes and a tasty meatloaf sandwich. Since Pete's is only open until 3 pm, we recommend getting in and out on the early side.

ICE CREAM
Christina's

Chocolate and vanilla: mere child's play to Ray Ford. The English-born brains behind Inman Square's envelope-pushing ice cream parlor saw Baskin-Robbins' 31 flavors and raised them by dozens more. That's right; the rotating roster of hundreds of super-premium ice creams yields at least 50 to 60 in-store varieties (not including the 33 fruit-focused sorbets like guava, mandarin-orange chocolate and seasonal rhubarb) many of which are inspired by Ford's adjoining spice shop on the other side of the wall. Scoop-shop employees reportedly spend much of their day scrupulously scraping sticky black seeds from Madagascar vanilla beans—and by the looks of the menu, they're probably mincing lemongrass stalks, toasting marshmallows and, around this time of year, crushing rose petals, too.

INDIAN
Diva Indian Bistro

No morsel of saag paneer goes undevoured at Davis Square's swanky Indian eatery, but what really impresses—besides the mulligatawny soup and frothy lassis—is the room where they fire up the grill. A rotunda of sorts, this indoor barbecue pit at the back of the house accommodates two tandoors that house javelin-like skewers of lamb and chicken. Other big draws include colossal masala dosas and the chef's special dinners. These combo deals combine meats, samosas, naan, your choice of entree, basmati rice, dessert and a hot towel… all for under $20.

ITALIAN
Stella

It seems impossible, but the Caesar salad and spaghetti with meatballs at Stella never grow old. The combined $25 price tag for that comforting meal doesn't hurt either. Of course, Stella is nothing if not a scene, and chef Evan Deluty also prepares trendier dishes like linguine with asparagus cream, poached egg, truffle and thyme. Diners can wash it down with hip cocktails like the basil lime gimlet. Certainly more experimental and upscale Italian exists in this city. But for your money, there isn't a better regular spot.

KOREAN
Buk Kyung

Even though this Somerville treasure (and its more upmarket twin in Allston) hovers halfway between Beijing and Seoul and doesn't grill up any kalbi, we still think it takes top honors when it comes to the oodles of noodles, rice, stir-fries and soups. Springy cellophane strands take a turn in a hot, sesame-oiled wok with pork threads and veggies to make the most addictive chap chae in town. The cooking vessel itself, your very own stone cauldron, is the star of the ubiquitous—but incredibly satisfying—kopdol bibimbap. Use a heavy hand to douse this rib-sticking rice dish with house-made chili sauce and wait… just a few minutes for the bottom crust to form. It's one-pot Seoul food at its best.

Or cozy up to the black-on-gray bar for a Buddha's Wings cocktail, an energizing kick of Buddha's Hand vodka, Red Bull and prickly pear cactus nectar.

LATE-NIGHT
Franklin Café

JUDGING BY THE CLASSY clientele huddled three-deep at this chic Shawmut Ave. staple, the pairing of french fries and skilled bartenders is a winning formula for keeping crowds flowing into the wee hours. Local foodies craving straightforward, hearty fare come for seasonal dishes like turkey meatloaf dressed with smashed potatoes and fig gravy, Asian-flavored beef ribs and smoky skillet-roasted mussels—all of which are available until last call. But we figure it's the cocktails made with fresh-squeezed juice and the hand-cut shoestring potato laces that keep the lights running well after dark.

LUNCH
Hot Tomatoes

Don't bother asking any of the staffers how they make the Bolognese. "If I told you," one joked, "I'd have to kill you." (Our only hint: It cooks for a long, long time.) Well, fine. Carmen Malloy and her husband, Jeff, can keep their sauce a secret—just as they've done at the couple's big-sister restaurant, Carmen, for years—so long as they continue ladling plenty of it onto a fresh ciabatta bun. Out of all the delicious sandwiches, salads and pizzas made fresh at their funky North End cafe, the Italian-inspired Sloppy Joey is a must-have meal (or two—it's enormous), though you shouldn't consider leaving without a scoop of the exceptional pasta salad or a sweet side of the shriveled oven-roasted tomatoes.

MARTINI
Oak Room

As drink fads come and go, the martini still remains a strong old-school classic, and the bartenders at the Oak Room have long served the city's best. Not only do they offer an impressive number of variations, but they serve them in style; each comes in its own carafe resting in ice, ensuring the ideal chill factor. Although the cocktail menu sports a rotating list of seasonal choices, they excel at the original: hearty gin served straight up with a twist. It's hard liquor as comfort food.

MEDITERRANEAN
Oleana

You've never had deviled eggs like these. While Ana Sortun's not the only chef dialing back a few decades with these retro, two-bite snacks, her interpretation is the only one incorporating creamy tuna salad and earthy black olives. Do what the pinchos portion of her menu dictates—come ready to eat; these eggs headline a lengthy roster of dishes spun heavily from North African, Turkish and Armenian cuisines. Filling up on soft bread swiped through spicy whipped feta or buttery basturma-wrapped hummus is all too easy. But keep your eyes on the prize: the tamarind-glazed beef and the not-too-sweet take on baked Alaska.

MIDDLE EASTERN
Byblos

Way outside of town and well after the "auto mile," make a few right turns into Norwood to find Byblos. The room looks and feels like a function hall, but the intense aromas coming out of the kitchen prove otherwise. Traditional dishes like the baked kibbee, baba ghannouj and za'atar pie (made from a blend of spices) are spot-on, and the service is friendly. Hit it on a weekend to check out the belly dancers.

NACHOS
Sunset Grill & Tap

Layer after gooey layer, the nachos at Sunset Grill & Tap will make you grateful that you're not lactose intolerant. The south-of-the-border giant fiesta platter puts all other cheese-covered tortilla chips to shame with its pile of olives, cheddar, sour cream, jalapeños and scallions. Splurge and get the large with barbecue pulled pork and black beans. But only do so when there's nothing else on your social calendar. These nachos demand unflinching attention.

NEW RESTAURANT
T.W. Food

While some restaurants create a lot of noise upon their arrival, others, like T.W. Food, remain sleeper hits. Chef Tim Weichmann and his wife, Bronwyn, are low-key, but they offer an exceptional dining experience. Tim has worked at Aujourd'hui and Ten Tables as well as with Michelin-starred chefs Joel Robuchon and Alain Passard, and this culinary knowledge can be tasted in every exhilarating dish. An oyster shooter reveals fennel essence; a lightly scrambled farm-fresh egg matches the texture of sea urchin beneath it; a confit leg of pheasant is served with curling fiddleheads. The ingredients seem to shine, but really, it's Tim's gentle hand that's coaxing them. T.W. Food dazzles without pretense or ego.

PLACE TO GO WHEN PRICE IS NO OBJECT
O Ya

IT'S FAIRLY EASY to blow a couple hundred dollars at a restaurant where uni, foie gras, truffles and tuna belly make up most of the menu. At this sleek, 40-seat Leather District space, the ingredients may veer toward the ridiculous (kurobuta pork fat drizzle, olive oil bubbles), but it's a meal worth splurging on. Each bite-sized dish (priced anywhere from $8 to $159) is elegantly composed with flavors that can practically stun you into drooling silence. The omakase (chef's menu) can be tailored to fit smaller budgets, but for a no-holds-barred celebration, choose the $200-per-person version.

RISING STAR
Will Gilson

WHEN YOU STROLL through the Copley Square farmers' market and see David Gilson working a mini-version of his Herb Lyceum, you'll understand how his son, Will, came to call his restaurant a garden. The 20-something chef grew up surrounded by the produce and herbs he now features throughout his seasonally inspired menu. Between his food-focused childhood and his tenure alongside award-winning chef Ana Sortun, it's no wonder this guy's a natural. Gilson knows his way around pub staples like tomato soup and grilled cheese just as well as refined numbers like spice-brined duck breast and the creamy fingerlings he pairs with skillet-roasted cod. But what really makes him the people's chef is the grace with which he treats not only his food, but also his customers.

PIZZA
The Upper Crust

Once a lone storefront in the long stretch of fashionable Charles Street boutiques, this slice of Italy has spun itself into a total of 10 locations—and counting. South End and South Boston: Welcome to the pizza party. Purists can't get enough of the plain cheese—crispy, sauced with chunky tomatoes and showered with melty mozzarella—but with 48 toppings and a full list of locally named specialty pies (the MGH cuts the fat with healthy toppings, while the Lexington boasts New England pride with hunks of lobster meat), this pizza parlor definitely has the upper hand.

It's common to see local power players making big real estate deals over lobster eggs Benny at the Bristol. So no matter how much influence you happen to wield, after an organic carrot-ginger juice and a pile of multigrain pancakes, you'll walk out feeling like you own this town. PRE-/POST-FENWAY
Eastern Standard

Cheers to ballpark food—there's something to be said for flinging peanuts at the bleachers. But sometimes you want a pregame (or postgame) meal replete with cutlery, a tablecloth and food that doesn't come in a cardboard container. A little roasted bone marrow or baked raclette, perhaps? Not exactly sports bar grub, but even the Fenway faithful can't deny that the French fare at this crimson-canopied bistro has that certain je ne sais quoi.

PRE-THEATER DINING Pigalle

Going to a show is a treat; dining at Pigalle beforehand is a luxury. The small Bay Village bistro sits on the edge of the Theater District, making it both convenient and a hot spot for early diners. Chef Marc Orfaly's French cuisine gets a twist of Asian or Italian now and then, but his classic training shines in dishes like halibut en croute and crispy duck confit. The chef's tasting menu is always a good bet, as is dining at the bar, where small plates like an arancini du jour and a list of Malaysian specialties are playful but filling.

RAW BAR
B&G Oyster

You didn't expect Barbara Lynch to serve fish in a checkered-tablecloth shanty, did you? Lynch casts her net deep into Mediterranean waters for Portuguese-style clam stew and ocean perch bouillabaisse, but the real pearls are sitting on ice at the wrap-around bar. Her team of bivalve buffs shuck through the shop's lengthy list of oysters—some 200 varieties, with 12 to 15 available on any given day—before bedding the freshest finds alongside glistening jumbo shrimp and Woodbury littlenecks. Recommendation requests are encouraged, as is playing the field a little; staffers will sound off with wine-speak like "terroir" and "mineral finish" to help you navigate. With such raw talent to feast on, the world at B&G really is your... oh, you know.

ROMANTIC RESTAURANT
Salts

Salts' idea of a romantic meal doesn't involve stiff, formal rooms and suited servers. Here you'll find dim lighting, small tables and quiet conversation along with unfussy food that can be shared. While Salts' 42-seat space is a few blocks off the beaten path in Cambridge, chef/co-owner Gabriel Bremer has created a legendary dish that has satiated many happy couples: the lavender-honey–glazed whole boneless duck, carved tableside. If you forget to order the duck in advance (as is recommended), remember that anything on Bremer's French-inspired menu can feed a fine romance.

Mooo

THE NAME MIGHT BE CHEEKY (with the added "o," no less), but if you've ever been here, you'll know that they take their meats seriously. With the tweaks to old favorites, Mooo is a modern steakhouse—and it shows. The sophisticated white and cream decor is warmly lit and feels like Vegas by way of Beacon Hill. STEAK TIPS
Silvertone

You have to applaud a place that takes a standard comfort food and elevates it to new heights. Silvertone does it with many dishes, but the best one is the humble, underappreciated order of steak tips. At this downtown bar, the tips are smothered in a sweet Long Island marinade (bearing a likeness to teriyaki); the portion size is almost half a plate of tender meat; and the beef is served medium-rare and full of juice.

STEAKHOUSE: OLD BREED
Grill 23 & Bar

Deep mahoganies, authentic oriental rugs, leather chairs: The dining room at Grill 23 exudes its steakhouse identity. Dive in with a chilled martini or bottle of red wine and something from the raw bar before devouring one of chef Jay Murray's well-executed dishes. Whether ordering a humanely raised filet à la carte or a dayboat specialty like smoked salmon–wrapped scallops, the meal is in tune with its surroundings; indulgent but worth every penny. Oh, and the sides! The truffled tater tots are worth every calorie.

SUSHI
Douzo

There's been no shortage of sushi restaurant openings of late, but deciphering who's got the best spicy tartare is often a roll of the dice. Douzo can't be beat. Located at the meeting point between the Back Bay and South End, this upscale, lounge-like space specializes in creatively conceptualized maki along with enough cooked options to satisfy both sides of the raw food movement. Modern twists on standard dishes, like scallops with sea urchin and an eel-and–salmon-skin roll topped with caviar, raise this sleek and sprawling spot above the competition.

TAPAS
Toro

Actually, if you want toro (or any raw fish, for that matter), you'll have to venture across town to Ken Oringer's sushi bar, Uni, where the food is delicious but expensive. This Toro, however, is in the South End, and the house special at Oringer's boisterous, exposed-brick boîte is corn. Not the kind you smear with butter at backyard barbecues, but the kind that's grilled before getting rolled through mayo and cotija cheese, squirted with lime juice and sprinkled with espelette pepper. Like everything else on this Spanish-inspired small-plates menu (try the griddled gambas ajillo, chickpeas and chorizo, and pan con tomate), it's delicious and pairs perfectly with a bottle of vino tinto. And it's cheap—relatively speaking. Toro now serves lunch, too.

THAI
Brown Sugar Cafe

There are upwards of 50 Thai restaurants in this city, and you can probably recite most of their menus as easily as your phone number. Satay skewers with peanut sauce. Red curry. And, of course, the ubiquitous pad thai. Brown Sugar fires back with authenticity. A quick scan of the "Chef's Special" and "Thai Style" side of the menu reveals lesser-known recipes like clay-pot seafood stews, tofu bags stuffed with minced chicken, shrimp, shitakes and Thai spices, and a salted-fish fried rice. Speedy service and wallet-friendly prices add to the pluses.

LOBSTER BISQUE
Barking Crab

Lobster plays a strong supporting role in this sherry-soaked bisque. Meaty, bite-sized chunks are suspended throughout, but it's the fortified wine and butter that take the lead on flavor.

88 Sleeper St., Boston, 617-426-2722, barkingcrab.com

LOBSTER MAC 'N' CHEESE
Tremont 647

647 Tremont St., Boston, 617-266-4600, tremont647.com

LOBSTER ROLL
Neptune Oyster

Served hot with butter or cold with mayonnaise on a brioche bun, this roll is literally brimming with fresh chunks of red and white lobster meat. We prefer it hot, but the cold is a solid midsummer snack.

63 Salem St., Boston, 617-742-3474, neptuneoyster.com

LOBSTER PIE Amrheins

Huge, tender pieces of meat are roasted in the oven, then splashed with a creamy sauce (it tastes a lot like lobster Neuberg) before getting topped with buttered bread crumbs and tossed beneath the broiler. It's heaven in a dish.

80 West Broadway, Boston, 617-268-6189, amrheinsboston.com

LOBSTER SUSHI ROLL
Haru

These half-dollar–sized sushi rolls are packed with fresh claw meat, Boston lettuce, spicy mayo and avocado. Bright reddish-orange tobiko sprinkled on the side matches the color of the lobster. Just try eating it all in one bite.

55 Huntington Ave., Boston, 617-536-0770, harusushi.com

LOBSTER TAIL Ruth's Chris

Pulled up from the icy-cold waters, their eight-ounce tail is super-sweet and plump. The blackening spice gives it a hearty kick, but you can have it plain and drizzled with lemon and butter, too.

VEGETARIAN
Grezzo

Carnivores and veg-heads alike have all sunk forks into their fair share of lasagna made without meat. But how about a version without cheese? And without, um, pasta? Oddly enough, it can be done, and (even more amazing) it's the feature dish at this North End newcomer. In owner Alissa Cohen and chef Leah Dubois' vegan kitchen, cooking temperatures never top 112 degrees, so the vegetables, fruits, flowers and nuts they use aren't only hyperfresh, they're still considered raw. Besides Dubois' winter vegetable "lasagna," try the "gnocchi" carbonara with creamy "rawmesan," English peas, eggplant and pea shoots. Don't expect a bread basket, but patrons can munch on the cucumber coin floating in the water glass.

VIETNAMESE
Pho Thien Thien

Just across from Tufts Medical Center sits the best and most-undertouted Vietnamese restaurant in town. Though it dishes up go-to faves like steaming bowls of pho with fresh mint and bean sprouts, Pho Thien Thien especially shines serving the kind of fare Vietnamese moms prepare for a comforting supper. You can't go wrong ordering any of the items from the menu's "Family-Style" section. Start with a soup like the canh chua ca bong lau (sweet and sour soup with catfish), then delve into suon chien man don (deep fried pork chops with spices) or ca bong lau kho to (caramelized and savory fish served in a claypot), and finish with a sweet avocado shake for a refreshing yet rich dessert.

SOMERVILLE
Highland Kitchen

IT'S ABOUT TIME SOMERVILLE caught up. Our love for worldly food gems like Tacos Lupita, Buk Kyung and Machu Picchu notwithstanding, this neighborhood finally landed the local kitchen it envied in nearby Garden at the Cellar and Green Street. Speaking of which, it also landed the latter's chef, Mark Romano, who's set up shop on this namesake street and satiates local palates with Southern-bent soul food like pulled pork on a bun, smoked bluefish cakes and creamy grits studded with shrimp. Specials like grilled baby artichokes with aioli are a must, and the cocktail program, brought to you by former Gaslight and UpStairs on the Square bartenders, is a smashing success (try the bourbon smash). Were there a few more flatscreens around the room, this would be a great place to catch the game, but locals remain content just rocking out to Romano's jukebox tunes.

WINE AND CHEESE SHOP
Formaggio Kitchen

What started out as Ihsan and Valerie Gurdal's carefully coddled fromagerie in Huron Village has grown into quite the big cheese with a third location in Manhattan. But the rest of the Gurdals' agenda is all about the small-scale stuff. Fromage is hand-selected at the source by members of their globe-trotting staff—an initiative they've been pushing recently—and, when appropriate, aged in the store's very own cave. House-made pancetta, rabbit pâté and true jamón Ibérico—fetching $100-plus per pound—only begin to fill the charcuterie case. Shelves are cluttered with condiments, imported French produce, fine wines, high-octane oils and aged vinegars. And if you happen to strike it lucky, you'll stop in just after local La Tène chocolatier Brendan Gannon has been by on his bicycle with handmade confections—one of which he makes, fittingly enough, with a French triple-crème.

WINE BAR
The Butcher Shop

Barbara Lynch doesn't want you to just swill her wines (brilliantly overseen by Cat Silirie). She wants you to understand them and the grapes from whence they came. Which is why she recently took a handful of enthusiastic foodies on a field trip—to Italy, of course. Suddenly they were able to put a vine with all those Barolos, a rice paddy with the carnaroli in her risotto and (hate to say it, but…) a pig with her pork rillettes. Back in Boston, the blackboard full of informational chalk marks is for your wine-reading pleasure—shoptalk, if you will. And, naturally, the contents of the cold case in back—unctuously marbled beef, house-made charcuterie and confitures, black-truffle butter—come tidily labeled for the taking.

WINGS
Buff's Pub

When it comes to locally hot-sauced snackers, it's a hands-down victory for Newton Corner's hideaway sports bar. Locals will tell you there's no better pub for drawing a pint, pulling up a barstool and watching the game in hi-def—Celtics, Sox, Pats, Bruins, or otherwise. But it's the team of classic Buffalo, BBQ, honey BBQ, teriyaki and legendary honey hots that draws the out-of-towners. Catch a glimpse of the kitchen and you'll see the apron-clad wingmen hurl chicken flyers and drumettes into the frialator by the barrelful before dousing them with the finger-lickin', tongue-stingin' sweet sauce that makes these wings take flight.

NEIGHBORHOOD RESTAURANTS

BACK BAY
Mistral

We love a place where we instantly feel at home and in the middle of a spectacle at the same time. Straddling the border between the upscale Back Bay and super-chic South End, Mistral is at the epicenter of Boston's see-and-be-seen scene. Chef/owner Jamie Mammano's decadent (and pricey) Mediterranean-French menu becomes part of the show with fresh, seasonal ingredients playing a major role in dishes like chilled white asparagus salad and roasted duck with a cranberry gastrique. It's always a meal worthy of applause.

BEACON HILL
No. 9 Park

Sophisticated yet approachable, the dining room at No. 9 Park has been a longtime favorite of Beacon Hillers—as well as of chef Barbara Lynch's countless fans. The French-Italian cooking remains a winner with dishes like the prune-stuffed gnocchi now sitting alongside newcomers like Vermont lamb tartare and seared white tuna. And thanks to a devoted bar staff led by mixologist John Gertsen, the cocktail selection is continually hitting highs.

BROOKLINE
Fugakyu

Fugakyu isn't so much a sushi restaurant as it is a fortress of fish. Few Coolidge Corner buildings stand taller or accommodate larger groups (250-plus), yet on busy nights patrons pack into the lobby sardine-style (you'd think Daisuke was actually inside, demoing how to roll his Matsuzaka Makimono). Nigiri fingers come by the pair, while purists tend to drop a couple extra bucks and indulge in threesomes of buttery-tender sashimi slivers. Belly up to the sushi bar to feast kaiten-style or enjoy an above-average maki roll from the confines of your own rice paper–screened booth. And don't hesitate to hit them up for a late-night craving; last call's not until 1:30 am.

CAMBRIDGE
Rialto

Chef Jody Adams is having the time of her life. The revamped Rialto, complete with a sexy lounge and gauzy curtains, has become her Italian playground, where dishes like nettle risotto dressed with pancetta, peas and clams show off her passion for regional cuisine done simply. She's introduced cabaret dinners and keeps her fans posted on kitchen happenings through her blog, while leaving her tried-and-true classics on the menu. All of this makes it impossible not to have an incredible experience at Rialto.

CHARLESTOWN
Olives

Even after all these years, dining at Olives is an utter treat. Sit at the bar facing the kitchen and you've got a front-row seat to one of the city's best dinner theaters. Or hang out in the comfy, oversized booths and nibble on yellowfin tuna tartare and the signature caramelized onion and goat cheese tart. Chef Todd English may not be behind the stove anymore, but his capable disciples have given new life to this old classic.

SOUTH BOSTON
St. Alfonzo's Kitchen

FORMERLY CALLED Potbellies, this 18-seater is a great spot to belly up and grab a comforting meal from chef/owner Peter Irving and his wife, Natasha. They keep the food straightforward and the prices slim. The writing on the chalkboard walls details fillings for their dozen-plus sandwiches (try the Godfather or the Cuban on rye), plus house specials like baked local scrod, pasta bolognese and showstopper sides like macaroni salad, marinated mushrooms and quick pickles. These eats, plus the couple's unremitting hospitality—and the whopping slices of Sweet Tooth Bakery cake they serve for dessert—keep their cozy kitchen bursting at the seams.

DORCHESTER

Ashmont Grill

Before the Ashmont Grill opened in 2005, Dorchester residents had nowhere to camp out for a leisurely meal. Now that they do, locals take full advantage, sometimes coming in two or three nights a week—and even queuing up on weekends. Inside the airy, spacious dining room or out back on the hidden patio, Ashmont Grill's a friendly spot where neighbors munch on reasonably priced, sturdy entrees like the house-smoked ribs, pulled pork sandwich with house-made pickles and bubbling four-fromage mac 'n' cheese. Monday-night wine dinners are known to sell out, but for a low-key meal, stop in for lunch and a heaping plate of the gut-busting (in a good way) Trainwreck Fries.

555 Talbot Ave., Dorchester, 617-825-4300, ashmontgrill.com

DOWNTOWN

Radius

It's not that there are slim pickings downtown. It's that no one can compete with Michael Schlow, Esti Parsons and Christopher Myers' outstanding restaurant Radius and their modern French menu. And while you can savor a three-hour dinner served by suited staff marching out modern interpretations of ceviche, foie gras and homemade gnocchi, you can also linger happily at the bar for a gourmet treat of spicy duck quesadilla or tempura asparagus. The signature slow-roasted burger, with Vermont cheddar, crispy onions and horseradish sauce, has gotten especially high marks of late.

JAMAICA PLAIN

Ten Tables

Even the bread and oil at JP's most coveted tables score a perfect 10. Should you have any to spare, the Portuguese fisherman's stew—a humble seafood stock bejeweled with briny bivalves and meaty odd cuts of swordfish—tastes better sopped with a hunk of sourdough than slurped from a spoon. Chef/owner Krista Kranyak has yet to show off anything but organic, fresh-focused talent when it comes to local produce, hand-cut pastas and a charcuterie plate that's the talk of this town's blogger boards. The link of Toulouse-style sausage chef David Punch makes in the kitchen cubical is divine.

SOUTH END

Hamersley's Bistro

Enough with the darned chicken already, Gordon Hamersley has said. He keeps the impossibly simple bird on the menu to avoid consumer riots—and to pay the bills—but his favorite dinner guests are those who fly the coop and allow him to spread his wings. (Traditionalists, don't be shy; giving the chicken the night off isn't exactly fowl play.) That said, this soft-spoken chef doesn't muddle his bistro fare with dehydrated honey and argan oil. He'll stick to his slow-roasted duck, salmon bedded with braised lentils and spicy halibut-clam roast, just as sure as he'll tip his Sox cap to regulars as he ambles through the dining room.

NORTH END
Carmen

SURE, THE WAIT IS notorious, but there's a reason why. Carmen, the cozy 10-table North End favorite, is as close as you'll get to Nonna's kitchen. From roasted pepper-and-mozzarella bar snacks to the deeply layered roasted tomato sauce served with baked ziti, each dish is a comforting reminder that no matter what happens around it, this neighborhood will never change. And for the record: They do take reservations.

FORT POINT
Persephone

CHEF MICHAEL LEVITON'S sleek, industrial-like Fort Point space is already the meeting spot of choice for the hipster artists and loft workers in this neighborhood. Here's why: The lounge has two Guitar Hero and two Wii stations, it serves salty, crave-able bar snacks, and the menu is almost entirely sourced from local, sustainable purveyors. Plus, the plates with shared dishes—like a whole, pan-seared fish or humanely raised veal shoulder—are reasonable enough to keep dinner for two well below $100.

BARS & CLUBS

30-SOMETHING SINGLES
The Beehive

MORE THAN JUST A NIGHTCLUB or a restaurant, the Beehive is a big, bohemian space in the old Cyclorama building in the South End. It still has buzz a year after opening, but you don't have to be an avant-garde artist or an ambience-chaser to fit in. "We get a good mixed crowd [in their] 30s, 40s, 50s," says co-owner Jack Bardy, himself a recent graduate of the 30s age group. "Black, white, artists, lawyers—anybody who likes an open atmosphere." If you also like to listen to "top-level musicians playing everything from jazz to reggae"—without a cover charge—this is your place.

20-SOMETHING SINGLES
Ned Devine's

If the Smithwick's on draft doesn't put a jig in your step, Ned Devine's has a cocktail that the menu promises "will make you dance like a Leprechaun." But Ned's true appeal is in its clientele—as fun a crowd as any in the raucous pubs of boom-economy Dublin. People come for the drinks, the music and, of course, the infinite social possibilities presented by a multilevel club that houses a great bar, a stylish lounge and a dance floor.

40-SOMETHING SINGLES
Sorellina

Stroll into Sorellina when you've outgrown the need for pub food, a huge TV and a hyper-hormonal ambience. Nestled between the Boston Public Library and Copley Place, the bar at Jamie Mammano's upscale Italian restaurant is a haven for grown-ups who haven't settled down and won't settle for less than the very best... in cocktails, anyway. Bar manager Taira Sloane makes a superb martini, best enjoyed with the truffled fries.

AFTERWORK DRINKS
Market

Chef Rene Michelena's latest venture is already a destination. Strategically located in the Financial District, it's perfectly positioned to lure upscale professionals into a lounge-like bar that provides sanctuary, sustenance and, most important, something to drink after a hard day at Ye Olde House o' Hedgefunds. You'll find cocktails like the French 77, made with ingredient-of-the-moment

St-Germain. Other fruity frivolities include the blackberry bellini, the watermelon mint martini and the funky Lava Lamp: champagne and lime juice dotted with dried cranberries. Yes, it's good to be a grown-up.

BAR GAMES
Achilles Project
How ya gonna lure 'em anywhere else once they've played with Wii? Besides the fabulous drinks concocted by bar manager Chris Graeff, the comfy lounge seating and the delicious snacks (try the baked-to-order pretzel with bacon and sea salt), this stylish yet laid-back venue offers patrons a variety of different Wii sports games: bowling, golf, tennis, ping-pong, boxing and go-kart racing. All this, plus Xbox Guitar Hero. From here on, trivia is in the same category as eight-track tapes.

BEER BAR
Sunset Grill & Tap
If it's beer, it's here—in flights, casks, bottles, kegs and cans. The Sunset claims the largest selection of beer on the East Coast: more than 100 types on tap, plus close to 400 microbrews, exotic imports and seasonal selections. But wait, there's more. Membership in the beer club entitles you to a T-shirt "earned" upon completing a card that certifies you've consumed a sufficient quantity of booze on three different "tours": Tap Tour, Micro Tour and Euro Tour. Happy trails!

BEST-KEPT SECRET
The Columbus Cafe & Bar
For its regular clientele—90 percent of whom live within an eight-block radius—the Bar at the Columbus Cafe functions as a sort of off-site living room plus patio. "It's cute with no pretense," says Bob Guerriero, who co-owns the bar and adjacent Columbus Cafe with his partner (and chef) Jim Contreras. "Cute" translates to a small, friendly space whose dark-green walls are adorned with photos of "my favorite actors—mostly dead people" and a Shelly Winters "shrine" above the cooler. "No pretense" applies to Guerriero's own taste as well: "Miller is our biggest seller," he says. "It's my favorite, and it's easy to open."

BREW PUB
John Harvard's Brew House
What started in a centrally located—albeit underground—space in Harvard Square has grown into a chain, with outlets beyond Massachusetts and a brand of microbrewed beer so popular that it's now served aboard the Martha's Vineyard and Nantucket Island ferries. Back in the original venue, warmly decorated with stained glass and dark wood, the main attraction is still the drinks, including award-winning pale and nut-brown ales, as well as a rotating selection of seasonal brews, from summer blonde to Oktoberfest. Soak up the suds with a half-pound burger.

CHEAP BEER BAR
The Avenue
For a dollar a draft, you can afford to indulge (and indulge) your thirst for beer. Choose from Bud, Bud Light, Coors, Coors Light, Labatt Blue, Molson, Michelob Ultra and Miller Lite. Of course, other options are available—Bass Ale, Guinness, Sam Adams Lager, Stella Artois—but with the money you save on the cheap brews, you can buy a full meal (steak tips, pasta, grilled items) even after you down a bunch of nachos or jalapeño poppers. No matter what you're spending (or drinking), the 100" projection TV is a focal point for even the most booze-addled.

DANCE CLUB
The Estate
Formerly known as Mansion Boston, and even more formerly as the Big Easy, the Estate boasts a capacious space rife with glittering chandeliers, luxe leather banquettes, fireplaces and a range of custom accommodations for VIP clients, such as private bottle service. DJs spin Top 40, hip-hop and house at the dance club, where popular events include Glamlife Thursday and Satisfaction Saturday. With a list of "celebrity" visitors this year—the likes of Paris Hilton and Brody Jenner—it might be better called Boston's Best Spot to Appear in the Pages of Us Weekly.

DIVE BAR
Beacon Hill Pub

Valet? We don't need no stinkin' valet. Credit cards? We don't take no stinkin' credit cards. With sticky floors, rowdy crowds and a basement-icky aroma permeating the stuffy air, the Beacon Hill Pub is certainly a dive, but its Charles Street location makes it a destination dive. It's where grad students go to drink, get drunk and have the kind of "good times" they might recall fondly —if they recall them at all—at school reunions 10 or 20 years hence.

GAY MEN'S NIGHT OUT
Saturday Nights at the Roxy

What makes the Roxy the place to go "out" on Saturday nights? First, the music is tops: Promoter Chris Harris says he flies in producers and DJs "from all over the world." Second, the cover charge is usually $10, compared to the $50 these same DJs command at venues in Miami and New York. Third, Harris markets his party with geographic inclusiveness, bringing "fresh faces into Boston" from New Hampshire, Providence and elsewhere. And for extra credit, he often donates funds to worthy causes.

GIRLS' NIGHT OUT
Lucky's Lounge

Eight years after opening on the waterfront in Southie, Lucky's is still signless and swinging. Why is it geared up for a girly good time? Well, nothing's more conducive to keeping hormones in harmony than three flavors of Godiva martinis: white, mint and raspberry chocolate. Plus, the retro-cool vibe sets a tone that's more well-mannered than attitudinal, and the menu is packed with casual favorites, from the house-made tater tots at brunch to the "signature" pizza royale—with angus burger, pickles, cheddar, bacon, tomatoes, mustard and special sauce. It's a comforting place to chill.

GUYS' NIGHT OUT
Stanza dei Sigari

Stanza dei Sigari, tucked under Caffé Vittoria in the North End, is cigar central with all the trimmings—an extensive menu of premium stogies and the benefit of a full liquor license—so guys can grapple with grappa, single-malt Scotch, brandy, cognac or a martini. The spot has all the luxuries of home, if home includes a flat-screen TV and decor featuring museum-quality cigar-abilia. And for those who prefer trendy to traditional, hookah pipes offer water-filtered smoking in flavors ranging from molasses to watermelon.

Alibi Bar + Lounge at the Liberty Hotel

Yes, the punch lines write themselves when the bar at the Liberty Hotel is set inside the old drunk tank of the former Charles Street Jail. (Would stealing whiskey be "taking the fifth"?) But clichés aren't crimes, and Alibi, with its original bluestone floors, brick walls and outdoor patio, is a perfectly legit

Middlesex Lounge

IN A CITY OF nightclubs vying for the ultimate in exclusivity, Middlesex Lounge is as welcoming as Mr. Rogers' Neighborhood (despite the lines). "We're all about being accessible to all people, all the time," says general manager JB Bernstein. "People relax and cut loose, not worrying about what they're wearing." The clientele ranges from local young professionals to visiting celebrities who crave a laid-back vibe: "We just had Rob Lowe here," says Bernstein. "And who's that chubby guy from Superbad? HOTEL BAR
RumBa at the Intercontinental Hotel

Given that the business of distilling rum was Colonial New England's most profitable industry—Boston's first rum distillery was up and running by 1667—we've waited a long time for an elegant bar where the liquor takes center stage, instead of playing a supporting role in a mai tai or a Dark & Stormy. RumBa showcases more than 70 rums, from Mount Gay Extra Old to British Royal Navy Imperial, in a swanky setting where old Vuitton trunks serve as tables. It's an upscale pirate's dream.

IRISH BAR
The Black Rose

Established way before most of you reached legal drinking age, the Black Rose has featured live, largely Irish-themed entertainment for more than 30 years, including performances by the Chieftains (and John Denver, too, for you trivia buffs). When Irish transplants dine, they start with a pint of Guinness (listed under "Appetizers" on the menu) and continue with Mother Sweeney's corned beef or the mixed grill of bangers, rashers, pork chop, black and white pudding, Boston baked beans and potato. LESBIANS' NIGHT OUT
"Queeraoke" at the Midway Cafe

Where do lesbians go for a good time on Thursdays in Jamaica Plain? For several years now, they've been making tracks to the Midway Cafe for Queeraoke Night. Of course, JP being an inclusive kind of place, "it's geared toward the gay population, mostly lesbians, but everyone's invited," says one of the bartenders. From 9 pm to 2 am, the cover and drinks are cheap, and you can be, too. Choose from more than 20,000 songs and a boatload of props—guitars, wigs, costumes—and pretend you're a contestant on American Idol.

MOST IMPROVED
McGreevy's 3rd Base Saloon

Farewell, Foggy Goggle! You've been replaced by a spiffy, baseball-themed venue that draws genuine sports fans who want to watch the game alongside likeminded people of taste. Upstairs, lamps made from old Red Sox bats shed light on original and reproduction photos that depict baseball history. More comfortable than a box at Fenway, and considerably more economical, here's the bar that true Sox fans deserve.

MOST ROMANTIC
Dalí

Sharing little nibbles of Spanish tapas. Sipping glass after glass of fruity sangria. Gazing into each other's eyes... or glancing away to take in the Old World decor that covers every inch of surface area: the colorful patterns of intricately painted ceramic tiles, the rich glow of burnished copper, the voluptuous hams hanging behind the bar. It's all conducive to a sensual appreciation of food, drink and, of course, your date.

DJ's at the Garden

TALK ABOUT RAISING THE BAR—what was once a Hooters outpost is now a real restaurant with windows that open onto the street in warm weather. In addition to a roster of more than 70 beers and crowd-pleasing cocktails such as mudslides, margaritas and mojitos, the bill of fare at DJ's includes tasty dishes—house-made hummus, Guinness-braised short ribs—that have earned it a solid reputation for food that's a heck of a lot better than it needs to be, given its proximity to the Garden.

PLACE TO SEE AND BE SEEN
Liberty Hotel

You're free to go anywhere, and you're heading to the Liberty Hotel. What's your motive? Maybe you plan to meet up with friends for a cocktail and some bar nibbles at Alibi. Could be you're looking forward to breakfast, lunch or dinner at Clink. If it's a Thursday, Friday or Saturday night, it's time for a glass of bubbly at the Veuve Cliquot La Grande Dame Bar, under the rotunda. And then there's Scampo, the new Italian restaurant by Lydia Shire—need we say more? Novelty aside, this luxury hotel on the site of the former Charles Street Jail offers a wealth of places to see and be seen. Honestly, you could just work the escalators.

PLACE TO TAKE FRIENDS FROM NEW YORK
The Back Room at Stella

Just a few months old, the back room at Stella is more than an extension of chef/owner Evan Deluty's deservedly popular Italian eatery. With its sleek decor, flickering candles and gas fireplace, the 60-seat space has "more of a lounge feel," says manager Jane Reilley. Only open on Friday and Saturday nights (or for private parties), the back room boasts its own full bar, television, coat check and bathroom. Just request the area when making a reservation, and your New York buddies will assume you're on an exclusive VIP list.

PRE-FENWAY
The Baseball Tavern

Only a few minutes' walk to Yawkey Way, the Baseball Tavern has plenty of space—three floors' worth, in fact. But you really want to be on the roof deck, where you can kick it with beers—and a menu that includes everything from chowder, chili and jalapeño poppers to steak tips, scallop rolls and shrimp plates—while the Sox gear up for another glorious victory.

POST-FENWAY Game On!

Although Game On! promotes itself as a "multimedia entertainment destination," to us it's the destination most strategically located when you want to avoid Fenway foot traffic and luxuriate in (or vent along with) postgame analysis on 90-plus high-definition and plasma TVs. When the Sox themselves celebrated last year's AL East title by serving up fans on Game On's bottom floor, this award was essentially sealed. As soon as Jonathan Papelbon closes the door, this is the place to be.

HDTV screen. Maybe because the partying goes on until 2 am, spread out over four levels and three spaces catering to various musical tastes, including oldies and Motown on the top floor, and Top 40 dancing on the first. Maybe because, after the game, we can wash away the taste of cheap beer and hot dogs with a couple of martinis and a late dinner of steak tips or grilled swordfish.

Clerys

PRO-ATHLETE PLAYGROUND
District Restaurant & Lounge

Among the regulars at this Leather District venue are Red Sox Clay Buchholz and Coco Crisp. The Celtics' Paul Pierce and James Posey recently dropped in, and you can count on rubbing elbows with "a ton of visiting athletes," especially if you hit District on a Wednesday (industry night for bar and club workers). Clearly, word-of-mouth travels in pro sports: "During the NBA Finals, we've had almost all the athletes come through here," one staffer reports. For example? "I don't know, but they're all really tall."

SINGLES SCENE
Clerys

When you've got a formula that works, you don't need signature cocktails or a trendy concept. For Clerys, that means a combination of primo location, well-designed spaces and a menu that feels familiar from nachos to steak tips; in short, something for everyone, from neighborhood regulars to Saturday-night partiers. By day, the long, dark bar in the front room is lit by floor-to-ceiling windows and animated by sound bouncing off hard surfaces. In the back, a spacious, wainscoted room is cozy with a fireplace, stuffed caribou head and vintage-looking murals of outdoor sports.

The Four's Restaurant & Sports Bar

Three reasons why: location, location and location. OK, a fourth: 42 TVs showcasing the MLB, NBA, NHL, NFL and NCAA. Opened way back when TD Banknorth Garden was still the Boston Garden, this sports memorabilia–packed watering hole is conveniently situated across the street from the home of the Bruins and Celtics, and a landmark spot for fans of just about any professional sport.

SUMMER SINGLES SCENE
Tia's on the Waterfront

On the waterfront, Tia's is where landlubbers go to play the role of captain hook(up). Primped, polished and prepped for PDA, the crowd is single and single-minded. Yes, Tia's serves food (spinach and artichoke dip, boneless Buffalo wings, seafood), but this isn't just a dining destination. Even the vegetarians have meat on their minds.

WATERING HOLE FOR THE WELL-HEELED
Mistral

Wealth doesn't always buy good taste, but you'd never know it from watching the well-financed and expensively dressed denizens of the bar and lounge at Mistral. Elsewhere, they may spend their dough on vulgarities like Hummers and fancy golf accessories, but at this bistro they are what they eat (and what they drink)—which is to say first-rate, sophisticated and a perfect complement to the low-key elegance of the Provençal-themed decor. The tuna tartare alone is as enjoyable as the people-watching, which is incomparable.

BACK BAY
The Rattlesnake Bar & Grill

Don't get us wrong; spending the summer on your porch with a six-pack of Bud Light sounds like a solid plan. But maybe you want to give the Rattlesnake's massive, sun-drenched roof deck a try. The top level of this Back Bay favorite is the perfect place to enjoy a margarita or a glass of sangria, and the relaxed atmosphere makes the crowd—up to nearly 100 patrons—feel manageable, even when it's packed (which is often). And if you've got other plans, the Rattlesnake is great for a nightcap; last call isn't until 1:59 am.

BEACON HILL
The Sevens Ale House

Bar manager Buddy Sheehan wishes he had a clever anecdote about how the Sevens got its name. Instead he refers to the address (77 Charles) as an easy answer. Serving only beer and wine (as well as a modest lunch and dinner menu), the joint draws locals seven days a week—not to mention its share of map-toting tourists on the weekends. Despite what you may have heard, this is the Beacon Hill spot where everybody knows your name.

BRIGHTON
Brighton Beer Garden

The newest sports bar in Brighton has the unique distinction of being the only sports bar in Brighton, but that's not what makes it the top neighborhood hangout. That title comes courtesy of, among other things, the 31 HDTVs (plus three projection screens), the Sunday live-jazz brunches, the $7 lunch specials and a menu featuring everything from burgers, wings and nachos to filet mignon, salmon picatta and grilled tuna. The spot, which opened in April in the space that formerly housed SoHo, also boasts more than 70 beers from places as diverse as Holland, Singapore and Greenland, and a selection of signature drinks including the popular Cinnamon Toast Crunch.

CHARLESTOWN
The Warren Tavern

THE WARREN TAVERN was established in 1780 and can proudly say that one of its first clients was Paul Revere—we hear he was an ace with the musket in Buck Hunter 1788. To this day, locals flood to the rustic meetinghouse to enjoy their favorite beer amongst the ghosts of their favorite patriots (those not named Brady, Moss or Bruschi), and as the sign out front says, "All guests bring happiness; some by coming, others by going."

CAMBRIDGE: HARVARD SQUARE
Charlie's Kitchen

IF CHARLIE'S KITCHEN were a TV personality, it'd be Arthur Fonzarelli. Tailored as an old-fashioned '50s eatery with an edge, the neon lights at this Harvard Square stalwart display the day's specials, which you can enjoy downstairs in a comfy booth or upstairs in a more chill setting that also boasts one of the city's best jukeboxes. What else separates Charlie's from the pack? It offers Chimay on tap, and a live lobster tank helps make the seafood the freshest in the Square.

BROOKLINE
The Publick House

The folks at the Publick House know their beers, and there's a hell of a lot to know. The Brookline pub offers 275 different brews by the bottle (plus another 40 on draft), and there's not an employee in the building who can't tell you a little bit about each one. If asking questions isn't your thing, the bar also has a chalkboard describing the alcohol content of each beer along with its price. The Publick House isn't all about the booze, though. The menu offers its share of upscale fare—including an artisanal cheese sampler, moules frites and rabbit sausage à la kriek—plus an array of burgers and a rotating selection of daily specials.

1648 Beacon St., Brookline, 617-277-2880

CAMBRIDGE: CENTRAL SQUARE
The Cellar

The Cellar is more than your standard dive, with seriously devout regulars and beloved bartenders like Quentin Sullivan, who's been serving drinks since the place opened 18 years ago. Add Will Gilson's food to the beer selection and there isn't a better spot in Central Square. Where else can you pad your stomach with house-made tater tots between pints of Guinness? All the while listening to a playlist that runs from blues to Billy Bragg to jazz to Wilco.

CAMBRIDGE: INMAN SQUARE
Bukowski's Tavern

This larger outpost of Bukowski's doesn't lack the spunk of the Back Bay spot—it just improves your odds of snagging a seat. The open façade, meanwhile, means gentle breezes in place of smoldering smells. The bar has 18 draft beers (from Ubrock to PBR), about 165 bottles and cans, and a respectable cider selection (Woodchuck, Sin, Magnus). The menu features more than a few vegetarian options, but a basket of the sweet-potato fries does the best job soaking up the booze.

CAMBRIDGE: KENDALL SQUARE

No, you didn't accidentally wind up at a retro hair convention. Mullet and Ms. Mullet are actual beverage options at this laid-back Kendall Square staple. The drinks, which combine Bud Light with sambuca and Coors Light with a shot of woo woo, respectively, are just two of the creative signature cocktails that get slung at the B-Side; others include the Rhonda (SoCo and cran), the Jamaica Plain (18-year-old rum, neat) and Hugs & Kisses (Patron XO Café Liqueur with coffee). The bar also features "trashy canned beers and $15 bourbons," according to manager Patrick Sullivan, along with the essentia "babes, booze and wise-crackin' jokes." The other side of the

CAMBRIDGE: PORTER SQUARE
Temple Bar

Nestled halfway between Porter Square and Cambridge Common, Temple Bar is easy to miss as you walk along Mass. Ave. But its unassuming façade belies a spacious brasserie-cum-lounge that comfortably mixes old style with new. An urbane clientele (surprisingly free of students, considering Temple's proximity to a certain university) crowds the copper-top bar most nights, soaking in a laid-back atmosphere and sipping drinks ranging from house-made sangria to any of a dozen bourbons, accompanied by sophisticated noshes (don't pass up the mussels and chorizo). Feeling adventurous? Try a Death in the Afternoon—a mix of Kübler absinthe and Spanish cava brut that was a favorite of Ernest Hemingway.

DORCHESTER
Dbar

Once upon a time, looking for a good martini and ahi tuna ceviche in Dorchester was like looking for snow in Florida. In July. Under a sun lamp. Then Dbar opened, and the neighborhood fell in love with chef Christopher Coombs' upscale but unpretentious cuisine, along with a cocktail list starring magical potions like the cucumber gin blossom. A sizzling dance floor and themed "showtune" nights keep the romance alive.

DOWNTOWN CROSSING
Beantown Pub

According to manager Shawn Daley, Beantown is "the only bar in town where you can drink a Sam Adams across from his grave." Cool factoid, but this no-nonsense pub has other winning qualities, too. Located not quite on Beacon Hill and walking distance to Fanueil Hall, Beantown boasts big-screen TVs, pool tables, Golden Tee and Buck Hunter, plus food and drink menus to please the pickiest patron. And if nighttime debauchery isn't your thing, the pub now serves breakfast on the weekends. Just pour a little extra syrup out for old Sam.

Anchovies

THIS HOLE-IN-THE-WALL has food and spirits in good supply. The bowls of Italian grub (meatballs, chicken parm, polenta) are brimming, and there's always something extra in the martini shaker. Dodging the South End's mania for money and flash, the prices are reasonable and the decor veers closer to funky basement (a deer head, a drag queen's stilettos) than to stylish loft. It's a true haven in a sea of pretense.

NEWTON
Union Street

Recently featured on such TV programs as Good Morning America and Golf Destination, Union Street is set in an old boiler room at the heart of Newton Centre. The patio's retractable awning and outdoor heating make this a perfect spot to watch the Sox in April or the Bruins in November. In the summer, all three floors fill with a trendy, sangria-drinking crowd. Live reggae, rock cover and funk/soul/disco bands keep things hopping and do their bit to dispel Newton's image as a sleepy suburb.

NORTH END
Lucca

When you sit at Lucca's rich redwood and marble bar, it's hard not to feel pampered. Italophiles will love the wine list and the grappa, while the bar menu features luxurious treats like crêpes with wild mushrooms and black truffle vinaigrette or pâté. Wash it all down with a cucumber martini or an apricot blossom, finished with Prosecco. Or skip the fancy drinks and stick with Peroni.

NORTH END: WATERFRONT
Sail Loft

Bare-bones and often noisy, the Sail Loft has a vibe that's less preppy yacht club than "Arr, matey!" Cookie jars filled with Oreos line the nautical-themed bar, but the kitchen also serves a solid bowl of clam chowder. The front fills up with afterwork drinkers and a sailing crowd keen to soak in the view at the waterfront spot. They know that a Harpoon seasonal draft or rum-and-Coke tastes best when drunk in the seaside air.

SOMERVILLE: DAVIS SQUARE
The Burren

As one of the top sellers of Guinness on the East Coast, the Burren remains an Irishman's pub. Step inside and you're transported to a village in County Clare, what with the rustic wooden benches and the Celtic sesiuns. There's live music nightly, and a menu of solid, hearty fare like the ploughman's lunch and baked cod. Monday-evening set-dancing classes are for the truly devoted.

SOUTH BOSTON

The Playwright

There's not much drama at the Playwright. A low-key, friendly establishment with a devoted crowd of regulars, its heart is in its beer taps and in the multiple TVs. There's nothing surprising about its menu of pub classics or its Sierra Nevada by the bottle. But that's not the point. A reliable pint and a cheery clientele make it South Boston's finest hangout. That, and we love that they have a drink called the Castle Island Iced Tea.

DAYS OF THE WEEK

SATURDAY

Gypsy Bar

If Boston had a paparazzi corps, Gypsy Bar would be its weekly feeding ground. Glamsters make this a mandatory stop on their promotional tours (Heidi Klum, the Pussycat Dolls, Kevin Federline, etc.), but Bostonians come here for the jumping scene, the gorgeous people, the splendid jellyfish tank and the first-rate DJs. On any given Saturday night, the line here stretches to the other end of the Common. Dress up, be prepared to spend freely and wallow in the scene.

SUNDAY

Rebound Sundays at Phoenix Landing

To most people, Sunday nights are the threshold of the workweek, a time for mild despair. But that never stopped the diehard partygoers at this Irish club. DJs spin local and international house music, while the bar services the crowd with Guinness and dirty martinis. It's a heady kiss-off to the weekend. Get here early, though.

FELT'S PURPLE-TOP billiard tables are a statement in ostentation, but no more so than its imposing columns, plush upstairs lounge and drinks like the Red Velvet (mixing cherry vodka and champagne). Fridays at Felt, however, are a nod to a more democratic way of clubbing, with complimentary pool until 8 pm as well as half-price appetizers. Live '80s cover bands crank up the volume until 11 pm, at which point DJs step up to spin more sounds from the Reagan years.

The Harvard Lampoon

Anyone brave enough to name Paris Hilton the Hasty Pudding Woman of the Year has a great sense of humor. (That's why we chose the copresidents as two of our judges.) Cambridge's venerable gag factory has churned out 36 Simpsons writers since its founding in 1876 (which, if we're not mistaken, is the same year The Simpsons premiered). Notable alums range from William Randolph Hearst to Conan O'Brien, with recent breakouts including The Office actor/writer/producer BJ Novak and up-and-comer Simon Rich. Who else has honorary members that include Winston Churchill and Ben & Jerry?

DJS
Dr. Claw and Ms. Thang

Peanut butter and jelly; tequila and salt; DJs Dr. Claw and Ms. Thang. Some combinations just work. Any socially savvy Bostonian has probably heard this dubbing duo spin at places like Le Foot Sportif or the Enormous Room, as well as every other club in town worth remembering the next morning. You may recognize DJ Ms. Thang as one of the only female DJs on the Boston party circuit, but she's more than just a (very) pretty face. Her mixes of hip-hop and house are sweet and sophisticated. By her side, DJ Dr. Claw is a veteran who's been manning the ones and twos for more than 10 years.

LOCAL ACTOR
Amy Poehler

It's been a banner year for the Burlington native and BC grad. First Poehler made musty old Saturday Night Live worth talking about again, thanks to her withering Hillary Clinton impression. Then her gutsy improvisational antics carried Baby Mama, so we generously decided to forget that she was in Southland Tales. Next up, Poehler's life will imitate her art when she becomes a real-life baby mama. She's also set to join Sacha Baron Cohen's fiancée, Isla Fisher, in the rocker-chick flick Groupies.

A creative writing teacher at MIT and fiction editor of Boston Review, Junot Díaz has wowed New Yorker readers with his short stories and won a Pulitzer Prize for last year's The Brief Wondrous Life of Oscar Wao. Globe-trotter Slater has also brought the shindig to Osaka and Tokyo, but she was here first.

SPORTS

CHAMPIONSHIP
Number 17

IF WE HAD TO PICK just one Boston world championship from the past year, it'd have to be the Celtics' over the Red Sox'. (Consider the Patriots' AFC championship a humble palate-cleanser in between.) A World Series title is thrilling and all, but the Sox are making it such a regular event that next year's Jordan's Furniture deal is going to require that the team win the Series in three games. For the Celtics, however, the new banner was very much in doubt from the very start of the season when Kevin Garnett, Paul Pierce and Ray Allen appeared simultaneously on the covers of SI, ESPN The Magazine and Cat Fancy. But the C's lived up to the hype, even though it took them 14 games to beat the Hawks and the Cavaliers. Those stumbles led to a Finals where the Lakers were favored to win, and yet Kobe and the Euros were summarily destroyed by our resurgent team in green. As for the questions about the Celtics—whether they'd have the fire, the discipline, the talent to win it all—Garnett posed his own question after the Game 6 blowout, screaming, "What you gonna say now?!" We say, congratulations on bringing basketball back to Boston.

CHILLINGLY ACCURATE CHANT, IN RETROSPECT
Ravens Fans Screaming "18 and One"

At the end of the Pats-Ravens game in Baltimore, when it looked like Ray Lewis and friends were going to break the Patriots' undefeated streak, the boisterous crowd began chanting "18 and One!" On the upside, it's a sign of a dominant football team when the opposing team's trash talk assumes that you're going to lose that game but still win the Super Bowl. On the downside, it turned out they were right, although the path to that realization was more painful than anyone could've imagined.

CLUTCH PERFORMANCE
Paul Pierce

Paul Pierce's clutch performances from this past season merit at least three pages, but for brevity's sake, we'll just focus on one. It was Game 7 against Cleveland in the Eastern Conference semifinals, and LeBron James lit up the Celtics for 45 points. But that wasn't enough to sink the C's, because Pierce chose that night to remind everyone who shouldered this team before the arrival of Ray Allen and Kevin Garnett. He dropped 41 points on the Cavs, but that stat doesn't truly communicate how unstoppable he looked. Every time Pierce touched the ball at the end of the game, you knew he was scoring: hand in his face, guys hanging off his arms, falling away from the hoop from 20 feet out—it didn't matter. With the addition of two more stars to the team, the conventional wisdom said that Pierce no longer had to carry the Celtics. But that afternoon, he proved that he still could.

CRAFTY VETERAN
PJ Brown

Without PJ Brown, the Celtics probably wouldn't have won the title. In fact, if the 38-year-old Brown didn't shoot 100 percent in Game 7 against Cleveland, the Celtics might not have made it to the conference finals. When the team signed Brown late in the season, it seemed a perplexing move—the guy wasn't even playing in the NBA anymore. But in his limited minutes on the floor, Brown made all the right moves, asserting himself and taking—and making—big shots in crunch time.

BILL MUELLER PLEASANT SURPRISE AWARD
Jacoby Ellsbury

HOW DO YOU ARGUE that a player as hyped as Jacoby Ellsbury is a surprise? Because you've got to remember that the Ellsbury enthusiasm is relatively recent, and when he first came up from Pawtucket last year, he was regarded as a promising prospect but not necessarily a guy who was ready to play in the majors every day. The Sox brought him up for 16 at-bats and sent him back down. They called him up for the second game of a doubleheader and sent him back down. But once he got his chance to stake out the Fenway outfield on a regular basis, Ellsbury made sure he wasn't going back to Rhode Island. Last September, he was named American League Rookie of the Month, and in the postseason he delivered like a battle-tested veteran, hitting .360 and causing opposing pitchers anxiety attacks anytime he was allowed on base. (Ellsbury's 2007 stolen-base success rate: 100 percent.) Given Ellsbury's Navajo lineage, in a few more years Robert Parish might have to cede his nickname.

15 MINUTES OF FAME, EH?
The Bruins' Playoff Push

Remember when the Bruins unexpectedly stood up to the Habs and won Game 6, 5-4 in overtime, to force a Game 7? That one day in April, everybody was talking about the team quite a bit. Then they lost Game 7, 5-0, and we all went back to caring about the Red Sox, Celtics and what Tom Brady had for lunch.

LEAST POPULAR JERSEY REPLICA
JD Drew

Mr. Drew, an enigma wrapped in a riddle wrapped in a hamstring injury, has never exactly been a fan favorite. But guess what? Nearly halfway through the season, his stats are right around those of a certain M. Ramirez, with Drew hitting for a higher average—.304 through the end of June—and the same number of dingers (16). He's also come up with timely clutch hits, and (cross your fingers) hasn't missed too many games. Now all he has to do is grow a mullet (always beloved by Boston fans; see "Boggs, Wade" and "Beck, Rod") and have a few facial expressions, and his popularity might begin to approach his production.

MVP
Kevin Garnett

We don't care about the knocks on his game; without Kevin Garnett, the Celtics wouldn't have gone in one season from a team with an 18-match losing streak to a team with the best record in the NBA. That's all there is to it. And anyone who complains about Garnett's crazy energy occasionally derailing his game need only think about the past several years, when any energy at all would've been an improvement. If MVP voting were decided after the playoffs, Kobe would have one less trophy and KG would have another piece of hardware to go with his new ring.

NO-NO
Clay Buchholz and Jon Lester (tie)

The year was 1984: Apple ran its famous Macintosh ad during the Super Bowl, Van Halen had a smash hit with "Jump," and two pitchers were born who would throw no-hitters for the Boston Red Sox by the time David Lee Roth was squeezing into his leather pants again for a reunion tour. The best pitchers in the world can go an entire career without throwing a no-hitter—Curt Schilling came within one out of notching his first last season—so the fact that two Red Sox rookies have each thrown a no-no in the past year is an amazing statement on the health of the Sox' farm system. Add the twist that Jon Lester is coming back from cancer treatment, and you've got a story straight out of an unlikely ESPN miniseries. As an aside, can we all agree now that re-signing Jason Varitek was a good idea? OK, we thought so.

OLYMPIC HOPEFUL

Brown University junior and Winchester native Alicia Sacramone looks to be headed to the Olympics in China, but her quest for gold has been anything but preordained. After a disastrous performance at nationals, the standout gymnast failed to qualify for the 2004 Olympics, and her national team coach, Marta Karolyi, dropped her. OUR VERSION OF THE BUFFALO BILLS
New England Revolution

In 2008, a weary New England fan base pins its hopes and dreams once again upon the jerseys of the cleat-wearing idols who dominate the talk in this region, from dinner tables in Vermont to the airwaves of Greater Boston. The team is the New England Revolution, and the elephant in the closet is their quixotic quest for the MLS Cup, the singular achievement that has eluded them and captivated the collective imagination like no other. The Revs, as they are colloquially known in sports bars from New Bedford to Calais, Maine, were runners-up for the championship in 2002. And 2005. And 2006. And 2007. How much pain can one fan base endure at the hands of cursed rivals like the Houston Dynamo and L.A. Galaxy? Indeed, the people of New England are sustained only by the tremulous, daring hope that maybe this time, this is the year.

RICH GARCES BELOVED FAT GUY AWARD
Big Bart

When Theo Epstein picked up Bartolo Colon for $1.50 and a bottle of Gatorade, nobody expected that the former Cy Young winner–turned–washed-up ragarm would be able to crack the rotation on a loaded pitching staff. But by the end of May, Colon was not only starting, he was 3-0 with a 3.50 ERA. Besides the fact that Boston loves its overweight Latin pitchers, Colon's mere presence on the staff is a sign of a broader, encouraging policy change. It seems that in the aftermath of the Arroyo-for–Wily Mo trade, Theo has decided that there's no such thing as too many spare arms, which is absolutely right. Sure, the team has to charter a dedicated C-130 Hercules to bring him on road trips, but the Big Bart signing is a gamble that's already paid off.

ROOKIE
Dustin Pedroia

American League Rookie of the Year—need we say more? OK, then, besides Dustin Pedroia's gaudy 2007 numbers—his .317 batting average was a major league record for a rookie second baseman—we love his attitude. When those postseason party photos from Game On! got e-mailed to everyone in Boston and their cousin, Pedroia was one of the star revelers, slinging drinks behind the bar and generally acting like a guy who was loving every second of his role on a championship team. While Boston is famous as a crucible of pressure, a place where negativity can undermine the psyches of the Renterias of the world, Pedroia keeps a cool head and a sense of humor. During last year's postseason slump, when The Globe asked him how he stays positive, Pedroia responded, "Hey, I have to be this way. I'm 5 foot 2, 115 pounds. Any edge I can get, I got to use it."

SECRET WEAPON
The Celtics Bench

Prior to the 2007–08 basketball season, expectations for the Big Three were through the rafters. But the Celtics bench was regarded as a band of hapless misfits, also-rans whose job description was nothing more than "Try not to give up too much of the lead while the starters rest." But lo and behold, nearly every Celtics reserve evolved into a valuable role-player. Eddie House hustled and drained threes. James Posey locked down opposing scorers. Big Baby morphed into your wide-body rebounder. Brian Scalabrine turned into a professional stationary-bike rider. By the end of the season, it was clear that the Celtics didn't earn the best record in the NBA because of three guys, but because of a bench that can keep the team in a game all on its own. That was amply proven throughout the Finals, but especially in Game 6, when the Celtics bench continued to dismantle the Lakers and extend a record lead all the way to the final buzzer.

New England Revolution

TRADE
Delonte West, Wally Szczerbiak and the No. 5 Draft Pick for Ray Allen

The Ray Allen trade was about more than just Ray Allen. It was an announcement that the Celtics were going to push their chips to the middle of the table and go all in for a championship. Because without Ray Allen, Kevin Garnett doesn't change his mind about playing in Boston (well, probably not—we don't pretend to know what really goes on inside KG's shiny dome). So the Allen trade, besides getting rid of Wally Zerb, succeeded on two levels for the Celtics—acquiring a great shooter and opening the door for the move that would decide their season.

BROADCAST DUO
Tommy Heinsohn and Mike Gorman

TOMMY HEINSOHN is the cantankerous, unabashedly pro-Celtics announcer—like your beloved uncle who's had season tickets at the Garden since 1963. Gorman is the straight man and the voice of reason. Together, they're why you watch the Celtics on Comcast instead of ESPN on those nights the C's land on both channels simultaneously. That, and you don't want to miss the inevitable moment when Heinsohn storms onto the court after a bad call and strangles the ref with his own whistle lanyard.

ANSWER TO THE BELLAGIO FOUNTAINS
The Rings Fountain on the Greenway

Between State and Milk streets, the Rings Fountain throws choreographed streams of water up to 30 feet in the air. The best part is that the jets are recessed below the pavement, so when the fountain's not activated you wouldn't even know it's there. For an awesome practical joke, lead an out-of-town friend for a walk down the Greenway and pause for a photo atop the fountain at precisely 11 am, when the nozzles come alive. There are very few chances in life to feel like Mickey Mouse in Fantasia, but that would be one of them.

CHANGING OF THE GUARD
Joyce Kulhawik and Bob Lobel at WBZ-TV Channel 4

You hear a lot about The Boston Globe buying out longtime staffers and replacing them with newer (and cheaper) blood, but the same crunch is happening in the broadcast world. Just look at WBZ-TV, which recently ushered out entertainment reporter Joyce Kulhawik (who started her gig in 1981) and 29-year-veteran sportscaster Bob Lobel. They both had good runs that would make any local TV personality envious, but it's still a bummer to flip to Channel 4 only to be reminded of the impermanence of man and the inexorable passage of time. Not to be dramatic.

DO-GOODER
Eddie Andelman

We're willing to wager that sports talk giant Eddie Andelman's annual Hot Dog Safari is probably the country's biggest frankfurter-centric charity event held at a horse track to benefit cystic fibrosis research. Probably. The Hot Dog Safari is now in its 19th year, and if you need an excuse to enter a weenie-eating contest, this is your chance to pig out for a cause. While the Safari has raised millions of dollars, it's far from Andelman's only

FLAMMABLE MUSEUM
The Boston Tea Party Ships & Museum

THE BOSTON TEA PARTY Ships & Museum on Congress Street was struck by lightning and burned in 2001, thus giving the British the last word on this whole taxation-without-representation quarrel. End of story? Not quite. Last year, what was left of the Tea Party museum went up in a three-alarm blaze once again, when a spark from some nearby welding kindled its tinders. Of course, a renovation and reopening are still planned. Because we're a people who won't stand down in the face of tyrannical rule, nor shutter museums that are clearly under attack by witches.

generous act. He's delivered baseball equipment to kids in the Dominican Republic and raised $135,000 for firefighters. He also amassed $50,000 for paralyzed jockey Rudy Biaz to make his house handicapped-accessible. Talk radio is rife with negativity, but over the years Andelman has proven himself one of Boston's most positive citizens.

EVIDENCE THAT THE MOB STILL COLLECTS PROTECTION MONEY
Howie Carr's Beating Heart

How else can Howie Carr consistently antagonize gangsters in print? Either the modern mob is truly toothless (we doubt it), or Carr pays the type of life-insurance policy that you don't get through John Hancock. Of the latest wise guy to run afoul of the feds, he wrote, "For the FBI, bringing down the Cheeseman was like shooting fish in a barrel. A very, very fat fish, that is. He weighs 400 pounds, this don of doughnuts, this king of the mozzarella mob. And Carmen DiNunzio can't keep his bleepin' mouth shut, any more than he can keep his pants from falling down around his 66-inch waist." If Tony Soprano lived in Boston, Carr would probably goad him for listening to Journey.

EXTRA
Murphy's Law

With all the films being shot in town these days, it seems like the Boston Movie Tours people have to add a new stop to their itinerary just about every week. It's getting so you can't have a beer in Southie without ending up as an extra in a major motion picture. The L Street Tavern made a cameo in Good Will Hunting, and now you can stumble a few blocks across Broadway and into Murphy's Law, which appeared in last year's Gone Baby Gone. We guess Ben Affleck knows his bars, and his local MCs: Southie rapper Slaine debuted his acting chops as the menacing Bubba Rogowski. So, to answer the most popular Gone Baby Gone question from out-of-towners: Yes, Murphy's Law is a real bar. And, to our collective pleasant surprise, Ben Affleck is a real director.

HOMELESS RADIO CELEBRITY
The Chili Guy From Toucher and Rich

Toucher and Rich have created a cult following for the Chili Guy, a gravel-voiced homeless man given to outrageous claims and truly creative syntax. The upside is that now people recognize the Chili Guy and give him money; the downside is that the attention sometimes seems to make the Chili Guy belligerent. Oh well—as he'd say, "Couple beers no beers." Exactly.

HOT NEIGHBORHOOD
Seaport District

Fan Pier is finally under construction. There are new restaurants and bars popping up monthly—Salvatore's, Tamo at the Seaport Hotel, 606 Congress at the Renaissance Hotel, LTK, Morton's. The ICA and Bank of America Pavilion are here. And the plans call for the district to keep growing out of its reputation as a giant parking lot. The Achilles Project has hipped up Summer Street with a clothing boutique and Persephone restaurant, while Joanne Chang's Flour and Barbara Lynch's forthcoming dining complex lend some flavor to the area down by the Children's Museum. And decrepit Jimmy's Harborside has been razed to make way for a reincarnated waterfront seafood joint. With each new attraction, the neighborhood is fast transforming into a place people want to visit, rather than just a place where people go to ditch their cars.

LOCAL ARTIST
Catherine D'Ignazio

Catherine D'Ignazio, who also goes by the moniker "kanarinka," is one of the finalists for the ICA's annual James and Audrey Foster Prize (to be announced in January 2009), which rewards an outstanding local artist who seems destined for greatness. D'Ignazio's projects aren't always the most accessible works, but they're invariably original and thought-provoking: Last year, she embarked on "It Takes 154,000 Breaths to

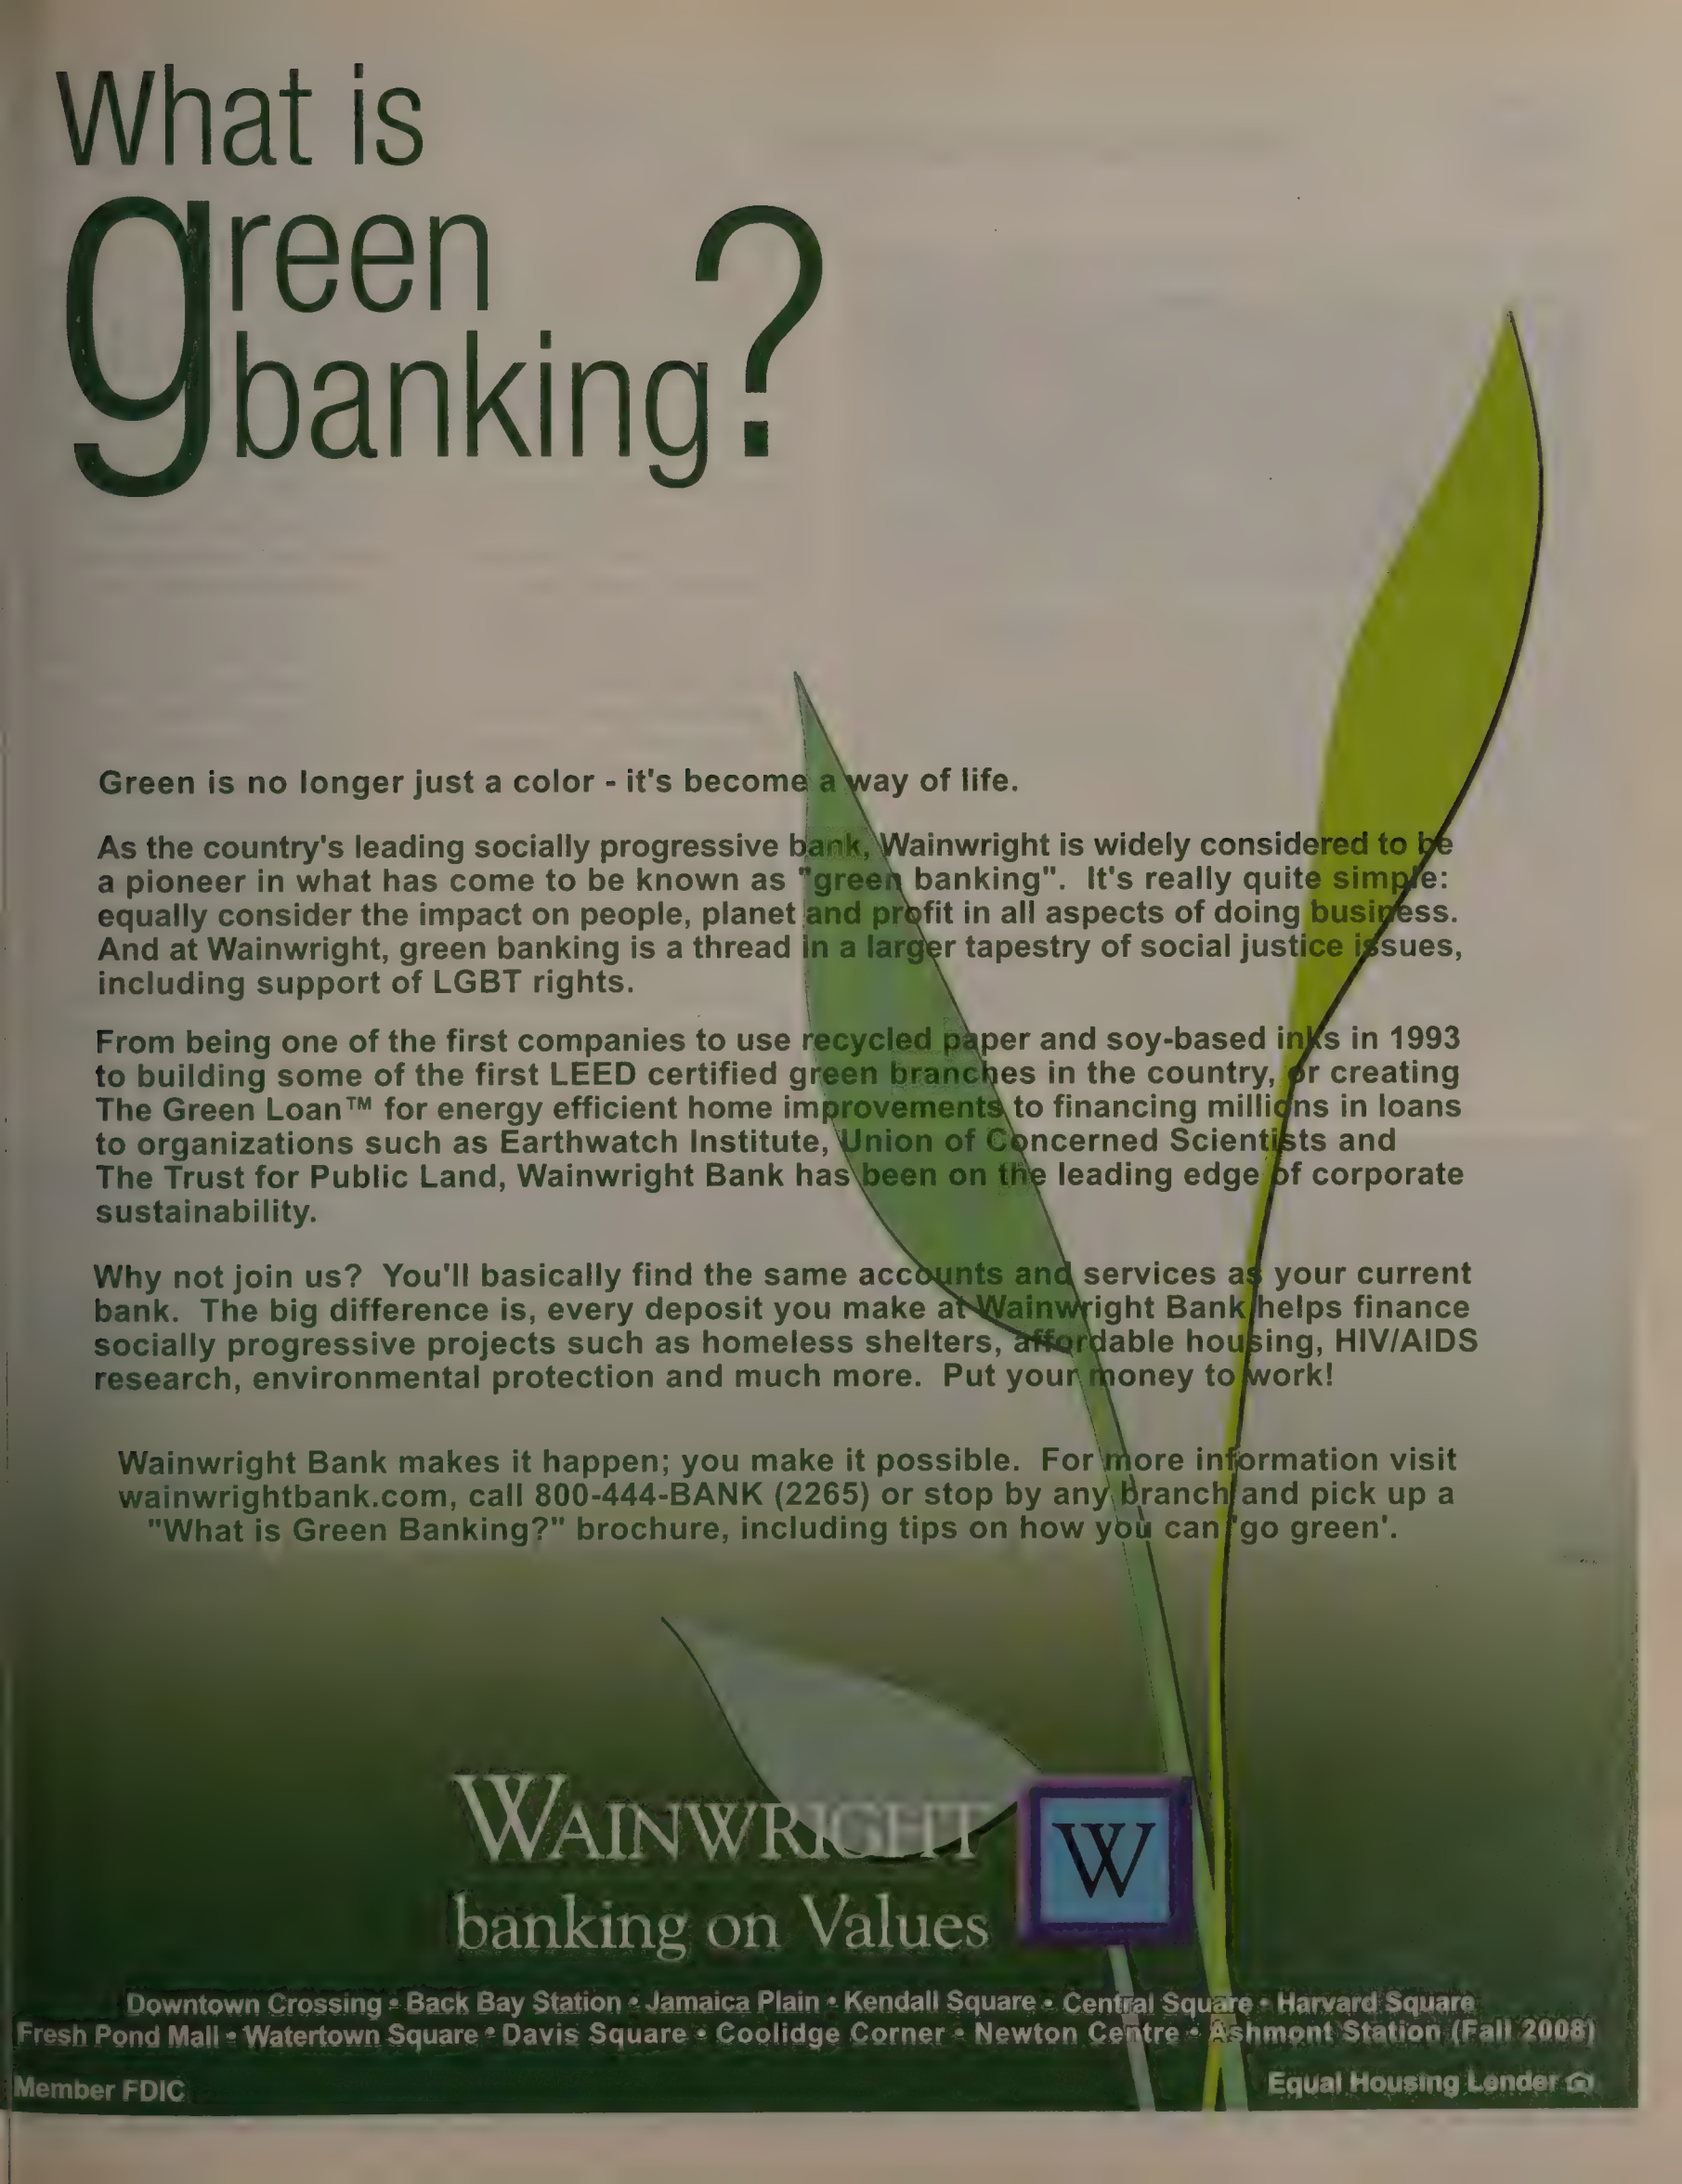
What is Green banking?



Green is no longer just a color - it's become a way of life.

As the country's leading socially progressive bank, Wainwright is widely considered to be a pioneer in what has come to be known as "green banking". It's really quite simple: equally consider the impact on people, planet and profit in all aspects of doing business. And at Wainwright, green banking is a thread in a larger tapestry of social justice issues, including support of LGBT rights.

From being one of the first companies to use recycled paper and soy-based inks in 1993 to building some of the first LEED certified green branches in the country, or creating The Green Loan™ for energy efficient home improvements to financing millions in loans to organizations such as Earthwatch Institute, Union of Concerned Scientists and The Trust for Public Land, Wainwright Bank has been on the leading edge of corporate sustainability.

Why not join us? You'll basically find the same accounts and services as your current bank. The big difference is, every deposit you make at Wainwright Bank helps finance socially progressive projects such as homeless shelters, affordable housing, HIV/AIDS research, environmental protection and much more. Put your money to work!

Wainwright Bank makes it happen; you make it possible. For more information visit wainwrightbank.com, call 800-444-BANK (2265) or stop by any branch and pick up a "What is Green Banking?" brochure, including tips on how you can 'go green'.

PARTY YOU WEREN'T INVITED TO Paris Hilton at the Harvard Lampoon

TWO OF OUR OWN Boston's Best judges, Harvard Lampoon copresidents Robert Padnick and Chris Schleicher, pointed out that we weren't invited to the party where they bestowed Paris Hilton with her "Woman of the Year" award. That's kind of funny. But seriously, guys: You'd better include us next time something like this happens, or we're inventing a category called "Most Awesome Student-Run Publication at Harvard That's Staffed With Good-Looking People Who Have Lots of Sex" and giving it to The Crimson.

Evacuate Boston," an attempt to measure how many breaths it takes to run Boston's entire 100-mile evacuation route (she's up to 57,645 as of this writing)—a literal calculation of fear. On the more whimsical side, her performing-arts collaborative, the Institute of Infinitely Small Things, is holding an auction to rename streets and landmarks in Cambridge for a new map to be titled "The City Formerly Known as Cambridge." Here's one vote for calling Cambridge Common "That Place Where Freaks Gather to Hula-hoop + Do Other Circus Tricks."

MORNING DJ
Matt Siegel

We've gained newfound respect for Matt Siegel since the advent of satellite radio. Why? Because he manages to be funny without running afoul of restrictive FCC regulations. For instance, Opie and Anthony are great during the XM portion of their show, but during the public hours (until 9 am), they seem to spend a lot of time struggling for euphemisms to describe the things they really want to talk about "on the other side," as they refer to it. Matty, on the other hand, manages to drag callers into uncomfortable conversations—such as when he had one wake her fiancé and confront him about his steroid use and their awful sex life—without ever bringing attention to the fact that he can't swear or go X-rated. As the new wave of satellite DJs could probably tell you, that's a harder trick than it looks.

PLACE FOR A FIRST DATE
The Otto Club

No, we're not suggesting that you take your date to the Otto Club, the Fort Point–based exotic-car clubhouse. What you want to do is swing by there first and sign out something red, Italian and impressive in which to pick up your paramour. The Otto Club charges a fixed fee per year (starting at $3,000) that gives members access to a fleet of exotic cars they can take for a day, a weekend or longer. The idea is that instead of paying for one nice set of wheels, you can use that money to drive different cars on a rotating basis. There's also a clubhouse with a bar for socializing. It's kind of like a country club for moderately moneyed motorheads—except that a country club isn't gonna help your love life quite like a Lamborghini Gallardo.

PLACE TO BREAK UP
Liquor Store

Here's what you do: You seat Mr. or Ms. Soon-to-Be-Ex on the mechanical bull. As they're saddling up, you yell, "I don't think it's gonna work out," then calmly stroll to the door. They won't follow you, because no human being has ever voluntarily climbed off a mechanical bull—you have to ride it until you're thrown off. It's genetic. And that will take a while, since you've tipped the bull operator a Benjamin to keep the bucking to a minimum until you've hit the street. Mwwwaaa-haaaa-haaa-haaaa-haaaa.

POSSIBLE PLOTLINE FOR ANCHORMAN II
David Wade and Bianca de la Garza's Career Trajectories

OK, so what if Ron Burgundy and Veronica Corningstone got married and coanchored the nightly newscast together? Then, they left their original jobs and became morning news anchors—but on rival stations! Hijinks ensue. That'd be a pretty solid plot for an Anchorman sequel, and it's exactly what happened to David Wade and Bianca de la Garza after leaving Fox 25 last year. Now Wade's anchoring the morning news on WBZ-TV while de la Garza's in the same spot on WCVB-TV Channel 5. Wade says that so far the professional competition hasn't impacted their harmonious home environment, but wait until rival anchor Wes Mantooth moves in next door and turns their world upside down with his zany antics. The way things are going, it just might happen.

WEATHERWOMAN
Dylan Dreyer

Look, the weather in Boston is awful. It's either freezing, raining or 100 degrees with dangerous levels of humidity. Bostonians watch the weather report the way Knicks fans watch SportsCenter—with a detached sense of doom. But at least on WHDH-TV Channel 7 on weekday mornings we have Dylan Dreyer to break the bad news, and bad news is a dish best served by an attractive woman. Even in bleakest February, there's an entirely different microclimate at the WHDH-TV studios, where the forecast calls for partly sultry with a 100 percent chance of hotness.

BIKE SHOP
Harris Cyclery

THIS BAND OF MERRY BIKERS has everything to do with two-wheeled transport, including impossible-to-find pieces. Trust them—if they can't get the part you need, you don't really need it. They can adapt your old ride or customize your new one. They're connected to bike people around the world, magazines, tours, museums and even know some bad bike jokes ("This Cannondale goes into a bar..."). But don't bother trying to reach them on the phone; they want to see your bike in person.

New England Mobile Book Fair

BOOKSTORE: LOCAL/INDIE
New England Mobile Book Fair
Despite the fair's name, these books stay put, in a giant warehouse of a store that was featured in a recent tome about disorderly businesses. No matter; they have thousands of remaindered books bought in bulk and sold at discount, gems no longer in print and a massive cooking section. This is the bohemian version of Barnes & Noble, which came to Newton in 1995; that very year, Mobile Book Fair's profits grew 10 percent.

The humongous cellar boasts thousands of out-of-print treasures and current best sellers that other eyes have perused, so they're great bargains. Before you leave, stop upstairs for info about upcoming events in the store's amazing author-reading series.

CATERING
East Meets West
The Martha Stewart of caterers, EMW is the big cheese of the food-service world, having been around since 1989 (before people even believed in such help). They place pretty flowers on the trays of passed hors d'oeuvres. They know every vendor, venue and veal chop intimately. And they can bring in clowns, musicians and bumping ladies to make your party sing… and dance.

CONSIGNMENT STORE
The Closet
Don't come out of the Closet! Stay in, shop, find amazing gently used (or never used) clothes from fashionistas or fashionistos whose eyes were too big for their wardrobes. Pretty summer separates from DKNY; designer jeans, shoes and menswear; a cool, white, quilted zip-front vest from pricey Italian sportswear designer Fila for $24. If it's older than two years, manager Robert van Giels doesn't let it in the door.

COURIER SERVICE
City Express
The Internet has its limits. It can't send your signed legal documents to an office across town with your penned signature fresh on the bottom, for example. Leave that to the fastest, most reliable delivery outfit in town, whether by foot, bicycle or Direct Drive car service. If a carrier pigeon were faster, City Express would use that, too.

DRY CLEANING
Holly Cleaners
We know a bride who, after much research, entrusted her wedding gown to Holly for a final pressing before the big day. She was so excited by the results that she forgot her veil on the way to the island ceremony. Thankfully, the perfectly steamed and pressed dress didn't need any embellishment. Talk about service: The HollyCraft hand-wash works on stains that are determined to stay; they deliver to your door; and they'll even clean your draperies in your home while you watch (if that's your thing).

They have everything for your most adventurous recipes, such as lotus root, shrimp chips, live swimming fish, lychee juice, strange and delicious noodles, plus rice in bags as big as your car. Another surprise is that the basics, such as salt, cost less here than at Stop & Shop. And you thought you had to travel to Singapore to find durian fruit!

FLORIST
Ilex Florist

Talk about fitting the flowers to the occasion. For a second wedding, co-owners Andrew Anderson and Carol Sharp came up with a wild, strong mix of colors rather than pristine white. Likewise, a floral gift for a new baby boy brought a blood-red bloom with a very suggestive stamen hanging down from its center. They're also masters at modern table arrangements.

West Elm Furniture

West Elm has massive quantities of attractive chairs, sofas, tables, ottomans and beds for those who've tossed out their dorm-room furnishings, but don't have a huge bank account. European club chairs are leather, but most of the couches and pillows are made with ecofriendly regenerated fibers, soy, former plastic bottles and trees from replenished forests. STYLISH GIRLS' ONE-STOP SHOPPING
Charles Street, Beacon Hill

AN INVASION OF BOUTIQUES along Charles Street has given this cobblestoned strip positioning-power against Newbury. It's quickly become a one-stop shopping destination where you can score from the sweet selection of dresses at Wish, the signature vintage line at Holiday and casual, day-to-night pieces at Crush. Sterling and stone accessories abound at the Ruby Door; Tory Burch flats sit alongside Hunter wellies at Moxie; and Tesorino knocks out unique rings. With Flat of the Hill for handbags and North River Outfitter for beach totes, Charles Street surely has everything a girl needs.

BARGAIN HUNTERS
H&M

It's inevitable: No matter how much cash you drop on designer duds, H&M outfits seem to draw the most compliments. And for good reason. The $24.90 dresses and $19.90 blouses at this trend-obsessed, Swedish-based bargain shop are sometimes more eye-catching than what we find at big-ticket stores. Well-known names like Karl Lagerfeld and Viktor & Rolf have collaborated with the brand; and come this fall, Comme des Garçons joins the pack.

CONCEPT
Achilles Project

At the Achilles Project, fashion is treated as high art. The loft-like Fort Point spot, which opened last fall, showcases cutting-edge designer garments (McQ, Wayne) in glass cases set on tracks. During the daytime the configuration feels like a retail space with wide racks, while at night the cases are closed to make it look like a gallery. The whole setup is just an appetizer for what awaits: the sleek bar and sustainability focused restaurant, Persephone. Altogether, the concept adds up to one stunning work of art.

Vera Wang at Kohl's

Every fashion-savvy woman has a trick up her sleeve. Ours is Vera Wang, as in the Simply Vera line available at Kohl's. The designer might be famous for her wedding gowns, but her dressy camisoles, basic tanks, poplin skirts and dresses for this bargain chain have edge, glamour and ridiculously low price tags. FASHION TREND
Bright color

Thank the fashion goddesses for bringing color back to Boston's drab wardrobes. This year, dreary grays and blacks have been pushed aside for cobalt blue, magenta, eye-popping yellow and lush green. There's a purse for every occasion. Thankfully the folks at Saks understand this and provide options for all of them. From Cole Haan and Kooba to coveted names like Christian Dior, Marc Jacobs and Fendi, they've got styles and prices for every fit and fancy. INTIMATE APPAREL
Intimacy

Getting fitted for a bra doesn't have to be as awkward as mom made it seem. The staff at Intimacy, prompted by owner and Oprah pal Susan Nethero, takes a "holistic" approach (meaning they don't use a measuring tape) to find the right shape and fit for your lifestyle and wardrobe. It's enlightening to discover that you're actually two sizes smaller (or bigger) than you thought. The shop keeps customers' sizes on hand so that browsing the "lingerie wall" or racks of La Perla, Aubade and Elle MacPherson becomes a cinch. You can stock up on Hanky Panky here, too.

Guys tend to keep it simple: shirt, tie, done. So what could be easier than Neiman's menswear section? It lays out all a man needs for the workplace in an organized and navigable way. Shirts from heavy hitters like Brioni, Robert Graham and Ermenegildo Zegna put forth a variety of body styles, fabrics, cuffs and collars. The ties, from designers like Ike Behar and Burberry, are splayed out in a rainbow of patterns and colors.

Prices start around $195 for shirts. It's no drop in the bucket, but then again, simplicity doesn't always come cheap.

MEN'S HIGH-END CLOTHING
Barneys New York

The high-end and achingly hip flock to the second floor at Barneys. The men's clothing area and fitting rooms feel like they belong in a well-lit country club (without any dowdy old men wandering around). So fittings for a Hamilton custom shirt, trying on a Dolce & Gabbana suit or slipping on a pair of John Varvatos boat shoes all become experiences commensurate with the price tag. What's more, you'll get personalized attention from a team of seven on-site tailors and, if needed, the store's personal shopper.

MEN'S MODERATE CLOTHING
Stel's

Partners Tina Burgos, Dave Nauyokas and Jon Callahan have created the ultimate urban bachelor pad in their subterranean Newbury Street digs. All brick and concrete, the store feels as comfy as a den (thanks to some couches and a worn-out rug) for the legions of customers who sometimes cross state lines to get access to their inventory. These fashion pilgrims come seeking hard-to-find styles like Nom de Guerre cardigans, Loden Dager dress shirts, and Rogan and V::room basic T's. Quick shopping trips often turn into social visits, so be prepared to kick back.

MEN'S SUITS
Polo Ralph Lauren

Suits are a lot like shoes: There's no point putting them on if they don't fit. That's why the cut-to-order collection at Polo Ralph Lauren continues to impress. That and the fact that ordering bespoke suits seems just plain easy here. Choose from the season's fabrics and styles, make an appointment for a fitting, and five to eight weeks later the perfectly tailored piece hits your closet. The accommodating staff puts all sizes at ease and will even set aside time after-hours to suit your busy schedule.

PARTY DRESSES
Twilight

Big night out and nothing to wear? Alison Barnard, owner of Twilight boutique (along with Injeanius), will happily solve any wardrobe crises, including the dreaded day-of purchase. She's amassed a stylish selection of eveningware and accessories at this North End shop, filling it with cutting-edge looks from party gear to floor-length gowns. Skim the racks for Rachel Pally, Corey Lynn Calter and Betsey Johnson, then pull the look together with a Botkier bag.

QUICK FASHION FIX
Macy's

It's 10 minutes before you're due somewhere and, because of a run-in with the coffee maker, your blue skirt is now speckled brown. For a quick fix, hustle over to Macy's in Downtown Crossing, where you can swing through their surprisingly vast selection of women's clothing to fill in any emergency gaps. Whether it's finding just the right cropped jacket or fulfilling a last-minute search for jeans, the shelves are neatly packed with affordable standbys along with piles of shoes, leggings, handbags and bathing suits.

The skeletal interior—crafted from Russian apple plywood and stainless steel, and adorned with dozens of exclusive kicks and clothes—didn't disappoint. Lines like Visvim and Black Watch by Ralph Lauren have established Concepts as an elite sneaker shop, but so has the private club downstairs where only the invited get to see what's on display. WATCHES
Tourneau

Now that watch empire Alpha Omega has exited the scene, service-focused retailers like Tourneau are allowed to shine. By carrying top brands (Cartier, Breitling, Vertu phones), servicing and repairing their products, and treating each customer like the only person in the store, this 100-year-old brand retains clients who are only too happy to hand over their time. Check out the Trade In and Trade Up program; once you're ready for a new look, they'll apply the price of your original Tourneau purchase to your next watch.

WELCOME ADDITION
Zara

We've long awaited the opening of this color-filled bargain Spanish chain. The trend-driven discount store brings newly launched designs to the shelves in no time (usually twice a week) and prices them all within reach (tops and skirts can be had for as little as $29). You'll find basic T-shirts and flip-flops as well as the season's rotating styles, like flowy tunics, wide-legged pants and gladiator sandals, practically right off the runways.

THRIFT STORE
Café Society

THIS SUN-SPLASHED CORNER STORE could easily be mistaken for a standard retail boutique, but inside the racks are filled with gently used period clothing and vintage gear. A lot of the goods, like flower-trimmed house dresses, cocktail coats, men's plaid shirts and a small selection of shoes, are merchandised to look brand-new, while the old-school collections of hat boxes and straw handbags remain contentedly from the past. Tables, lamps and a few other home items are also prime for the plucking.

WOMEN'S HIGH-END CLOTHING
Louis Boston

No one is more powerful on Boston's fashion scene than Debi Greenberg, Louis Boston's owner/buyer. That's why women trust her to dress them from head to toe in the highest fashion on hand. The elevator ride up to the fourth floor feels like an ascent into heaven, but even better is browsing through the impeccably chosen pieces from Dries Van Noten, Proenza Schouler and Brian Reyes. While the selection of Marni beats all others, Greenberg also takes care to secure up-and-comers like Minden Chan and locals like Maud Cabot.

234 Berkeley St., Boston, 617-262-6100, louisboston.com

Bloomingdale's

To step into this revamped department store is to instantly feel pampered and at ease. The open layout and gleaming surfaces are easy to maneuver, and the crowds, thankfully, are absent. That makes searching for a staple fall coat by Laundry or strappy Nanette Lepore heels a perk rather than a pesky chore. Smaller brands like Kooba are mixed throughout the store, which helps keep the prices realistic.

WOMEN'S SHOES
Nordstrom

When Nordstrom opened in Natick last fall (another opened in Burlington this spring), you could almost hear the clicking of Jimmy Choo heels as Bostonians made the journey beyond I-95. The suburbs certainly have their qualities, and in Nordstrom's case it's selection. From the vast storage rooms in the back of the store (which hold literally thousands of pairs), staff members march happily forth bringing customers their Sigerson Morrison, Via Spiga and Marc Jacobs stilettos. They have a shoe to match every need (pumps, boots, sandals and slippers) and budget, with 11-foot mirrors to give you the full picture. Sure, with gas prices and Boston traffic, getting to the 'burbs can be a bit daunting, but you can't beat the ever-changing selection of footwear.

BEAUTY & HEALTH

WELCOME ADDITION
A Matter of Face

THE NORTH END is more than a place to indulge in pastries and pasta; it's become a destination for fashion and beauty types, too. A Matter of Face, a tiny boutique owned by Paula Tierney, is stocked with stuff that will give you a glow. Tierney, who decided to relocate from the North Shore last spring, fills her store with brands that include skincare formulations by Caudalie Paris, certified organic makeup by Nvey Eco and mineral makeup from Skin Alison Raffaele. Lash extensions are available by appointment, and there are special events and appearances at least once a month.

BEAUTY BOUTIQUE
C.O. Bigelow

Some girls collect handbags, others splurge on shoes, but beauty products are a whole separate addiction. With shelf upon shelf of moisturizers, eye creams, lip scrubs, sunscreens, shampoos, bath oils, shaving supplies, hair gels, nail polishes, lipsticks and every other potion, C.O. Bigelow is where to get your fix. You can spend hours poring over items from innumerable brands, including hard-to-find lines like Apivita, Propoline and 100% Pure. Thankfully, the staff indulges your affections, and even tucks samples into your bags.

BEAUTY SALON
Salon Marc Harris

Getting your hair cut can be stressful enough (will you emerge with a shag when you asked for a bob?), so the relaxed atmosphere of Salon Marc Harris is a major plus. Harris, who was recently featured on MTV's Made reinventing a tomboy-turned-model, believes in feeding his stylists' artistic souls through collaboration on seasonal collections, which means they're not only happy, but up on trends. And with the opening of a new space in the Financial District, complete with spa services, along with the Andover and Providence locations, you can be assured of getting good hair throughout Greater Boston.

BIKINI WAX
Liz Johnston at Joi Salon and Spa Escape

Waxing is a necessary evil if you want smooth skin without razor burn. If you're even considering skipping a session, remind yourself of Miranda's messy "situation" in the Sex and the City movie. We recently discovered Joi, a small Aveda salon and spa along the water in the North End. The grass-green walls provide an instant pick-me-up, and you'll feel safe in the hands of Liz Johnston, who's expert at her task. After a session, nary a stray hair nor red mark lingers.

BLOWOUT
Cindy Mena at James Joseph Salon

Cindy Mena worked as a receptionist for some of Boston's top salons before moving up the ranks. With thick and wavy hair of her own, Mena appreciates the need to tame your frizz. It isn't surprising, then, that she provides the perfect blowout, wowing clients at James Joseph for 10 years. None other than Martha Stewart put her blonde layers in Mena's hands for an event at Harvard; the domestic diva has been referring friends ever since.

BROW SHAPING AND LASHES
LuxLash

A little brow work goes a long way in bringing out your best features. Luckily, maintenance no longer has to be a dreaded task on your grooming to-do list. At LuxLash, treatments take place in dentist-type loungers swathed in white duvets. The superbly skilled technicians create well-balanced brows and long-lasting extensions. Lash options range from mink to synthetic—and you won't need mascara anytime soon.

COSMETICS DEPARTMENT
Saks Fifth Avenue

Saks Fifth Avenue's recently remodeled department, which carries 35 cosmetic and 85 fragrance lines, is a makeup dabbler's dream. The open-floor plan, consisting of freestanding bays with large mirrors and an abundance of tester products, allows customers to wander easily and interact with the sales team, which includes resident makeup artists from every line, on call daily. Look for it on the big screen this fall, as it's featured prominently in the movie The Women, in which it masquerades as the Saks in New York City.

DAY SPA
Exhale

With its Zen-like atmosphere, Exhale is an escape from the hustle and bustle of city life. Combining healing therapies and pleasurable pampering (acupuncture, massage, basic grooming services and innovative skincare treatments) with yoga and core-centric exercise classes, it's truly a temple to the mind and body. The instructors, therapists and estheticians are highly trained, exuding a calm and gracious air, which makes the experience all the more pleasurable. Check out their new organic skincare line, GRN (Grow. Restore.Nurture).

DETOX
Dtox International

If you only associate detox with colonics, think again. Dtox International has something else in store. As their slogan says, "It's not what you think!" At their intimate, spa-like space, you soak your feet in a sky-blue tiled foot bath outfitted with an ion-therapy device that emits a low charge of electricity and gives your tootsies a tingle. The treatment is said to draw out pollutants like lead and aluminum through the pores in your soles, turning the water brown. Touted benefits include increased energy, fewer colds and, of course, cleaner feet.

ETHNIC HAIR SALON
Olive's Beauty Salon

Founded by the late Olive Benson, a pioneer in ethnic hair care, Olive's Beauty Salon specializes in relaxing, conditioning and styling a wide variety of locks. After many years in the industry (she opened her first beauty shop in north Cambridge in 1959), Benson created her own line of products, Universal Textures, which are used at Olive's. They're effective, as are the stylists, who enthusiastically educate their customers on the secrets of maintaining super-healthy hair.

FACIAL
Crystal Morgan at the Sports Club/LA Splash

Not one for cool lasers or pore-sucking devices? You'll adore Crystal Morgan's 50-minute Clinical Facial at Splash. Using products by Environ, which were developed by a plastic surgeon in Cape Town, South Africa, Morgan brings a radiant healthfulness to your skin through eight treatment steps that are simultaneously soothing and invigorating. Cleansing is thorough; extractions are gentle and effective; the massage is delicious; and the refreshing mask, applied with an oversized brush, is a fun finale that peels off in one piece.

HAIR COLORIST
Laurel Ciarcia at Sassoon Salon

With an uncanny knack for remembering color combinations, Laurel Ciarcia is masterful when it comes to formulating the perfect look for her clients' skin tone, features and lifestyle. And if you don't have the time or money for a high-maintenance look, she'll suggest an equally gorgeous alternative. Ciarcia, who started her career at Sassoon 15 years ago, specializes in color and only color, as is the Sassoon method. Her professionalism and experience inspire confidence from the start, and those luscious, multidimensional locks she creates are to dye for.

LOCAL PRODUCT
Sugar Collection at Fresh

EVERYONE LOVES A HOMETOWN success story, but in the case of Boston-based beauty company Fresh, the passion is truly for the products. Sugar is the signature ingredient in lots of Fresh goodies like Sugar Face Polish, in which brown sugar is blended with wild strawberries, and Sugar Blossom Hand Treatment with sugar and floral acids. And they're all available right on Newbury Street in a sweet boutique.

HAIR STRAIGHTENING
Kristen Moshiek at Beaucage Salon

We've noticed Gwyneth has been experimenting with waves recently, but we're sticking with straight—stick-straight. Kristen Moshiek at Beaucage is our go-to girl for serious straightening. Employing either traditional treatments or more gentle keratin protein potions, she'll comb, blow-dry and iron your hair with a discipline and care that banishes bumps, curls and frizziness to leave your locks silky-smooth. As any Rapunzel knows, good hair takes time, and these procedures can run three hours long, but the results last several months.

71 Newbury St., Boston, 617-437-7171, beaucage.com

HEALTH CLUB
Equinox

Bells and whistles are certainly nice (and expected by city dwellers), but unless a health club works you hard and holds your interest, they're not worth their smoothie-blending, spandex-selling, spa-enhancing perks. Equinox, with their abundance of equipment, varied mix of trainers and vibrant roster of fitness classes, has the perfect amount of pizzazz to keep you stimulated but not overwhelmed. Our favorite new classes include Buddha Camp for the energetic yoga fiend and Chaos Training for would-be MacGyvers. A second location, coming to Boston next year, will have you grunting with glee.

MAKEUP ARTIST
Michelle McGrath

Michelle McGrath, a natural beauty herself, is all about glowing, dewy skin, which works well with her Boston client base. With an art and fashion background, this South Shore local has been doing makeup for years. Following stints at MAC and a salon on Newbury Street, these days McGrath creates looks, both clean and creative, for models, musicians and sports figures as well as brides and other regular people who want to look extraordinary.

MANICURE/ PEDICURE
Lavender Mani/Pedi at Melt

Manicures and pedicures can be less than scent-sational, but not at Melt, where the treatments are long, luxurious and lavender. This specialty service includes a flower-scented soak, scrub and mask, hot towels, sumptuous massage, filing, cuticle care and, of course, polish. You can also add paraffin for an additional charge.

MASSAGE
Natalie Maibenko at Unique Verve

After stints at salons and spas around the city, massage therapist and esthetician Natalie Maibenko launched Unique Verve. In a subterranean South End space with Japanese-inspired decor, Maibenko, a petite beauty with amazing strength in her hands, blends essential oils and gets to work, penetrating muscles you thought would never give.

MEN'S HAIRCUT AND GROOMING
Barbershop Lounge

There's the no-frills guy who goes to the barber, but whose wife is often dismayed at the results. And there's the slightly more indulgent chap who does the salon thing, but never quite feels at home. Now there's something in between. Barbershop Lounge, which opened on Newbury this year, offers a male-centric environment with upscale perks. Try not to get too used to the black-leather club chairs, shoeshine service, pool tables and plasma TVs; after your expert cut and shave, you won't want to leave.

WOMEN'S EXERCISE CLASS
Gravity at Healthworks

If you like exercising in groups, have we got the class for you. Gravity is a resistance-training program using specialized equipment, similar to that of Pilates. The 50-minute sessions are done in small groups, allowing personalized attention without personal-training prices. WOMEN'S HAIRCUT
James Curran at I Soci

I Soci may not be the shiniest salon on Newbury Street, but their staff offers serious service. Everybody's friendly and talented, including 25-year industry veteran James Curran. Clients respond to Curran's laid-back approach, feeling instantly at ease in his chair. After listening carefully to the lore of their locks, he provides thoughtful input and proceeds to expertly style them (he's masterful with bangs). We hear he's quite the interior designer, too; perhaps he'd be willing to work wonders on homes?

WORKOUT CLOTHING
Lululemon Athletica

Toss out those old gym shorts and ratty T's. Workout fashions have been seriously upgraded, and Lululemon does them best. The silhouettes echo Seventh Avenue styles while taking into account different body types, which even not-so-iron abs appreciate. The colorful fabrics are comfortable and wash well, and the structure provides sufficient support. The outfits are so cute women often wear them around town, eliminating the need to spend money on a locker. Spend it on clothes instead.

WORTH THE TRIP
Andrea Dobay Esthetics

When we first heard about Andrea Dobay, we thought our friends were crazy to consider schlepping to Sudbury. But one visit proves why many a local personality sings her praises. At her fresh and simple cottage-like salon, Dobay, who's Brazilian and does an expert, well, Brazilian, tells stories to put you at ease. She used to work in Boston but left for a small space closer to home. Both male and female clients happily make the trip.

YOU'VE SUCCUMBED TO THE institution of marriage; you can't buck tradition now. Brooks Brothers, an institution in its own right, has been dressing men since 1818, and doing so impeccably—Clark Gable, Fred Astaire and Cary Grant were all customers. Pieces are exquisitely tailored and can be purchased as separates, allowing you to mix and match. While the white dinner jackets stand out among the tuxedos, the basic black wool ones with satin trim are dapper, too.

CAKE
Cakes to Remember

A wedding cake should taste as good as it looks. With two decades of experience, Ellen Bartlett has both areas covered. From mixing and baking, to filling and frosting, to decorating and delivering, Bartlett keeps a hand in the entire process. She does traditional and trendy equally well, whether ivory-on-ivory or pink polka dots. Also known for her artistic eye, she customizes her confections to meet her clients' individual needs. One couple, who met working at the Boston Convention Center, had her create a replica of the building—with them dancing on top.

248 Cypress St., Brookline, 617-738-8508, cakestoremember.biz

CATERER
Niche Catour

You don't have to win a Food Network contest to have your wedding catered by a celebrity chef. Just hire Barbara Lynch's Niche Catour, whose menus echo the seasonal cuisine, magnificent wine pairings and attention to detail found at her restaurants. Imagine a Butcher Shop barbecue, complete with Vermont suckling pig and watermelon granita. Or perhaps a fancier affair featuring roasted peaches and prosciutto with warm goat cheese, pan-seared halibut and Tahitian vanilla pot de crème. For foodies, this is practically reason to get hitched.

550 Tremont St., Boston, 617-423-4200, nichecatour.com

ENGAGEMENT RING
Lux Bond & Green

A relative newcomer to Boston, Lux Bond & Green is a 110-year-old company that's owned by the family who founded it. It's this continuity and sense of trust that has made the business a success. After all, an engagement ring is a hefty purchase, and grooms don't part with such sums lightly. The boutique showcases an array of designs in its collection and also specializes in gem selections. What are today's brides flaunting on their fingers? Round, ideal-cut diamonds of 1.5 carats or more, in plain platinum settings.

416 Boylston St., Boston, 617-266-4747, lbgreen.com

FAVOR
Apple's iPod Shuffle

You know the feeling. A song comes on the radio, and you're instantly transported back to senior prom or a concert in college. Do the same for your wedding day with a personalized playlist preloaded on iPod shuffles for your guests. Starting at $49, they're not exactly cheap, but much more appreciated than the usual frivolous favors. And mix CDs are so last year.

815 Boylston St., Boston, 617-385-9400; additional locations in Cambridge, Chestnut Hill, Braintree and Hingham; apple.com

FLORIST
Winston Flowers

You probably already buy blooms at Winston, so why not let them do your big day? Their exquisite taste and top-notch service go beyond basic bouquets, covering every aspect from the ceremony to the reception, whether an altar arrangement, chuppah or mondop is needed. For one fall wedding, Marc Hall, creative director of special events, not only designed the flowers, which included spheres of hydrangea, roses and orchids atop French glass flutes, but also the lighting, seating and invitations.

160 Southampton St., Boston, 617-541-1100, winstonflowers.com

L'élite Bridal Boutique

With gowns by Carolina Herrera, Badgley Mischka, Angel Sanchez, Elie Saab and others, L'élite carries the who's who of wedding couture in a browse-able boutique. Your dream dress eludes you? They'll custom-make you one. Or perhaps you want to glide down the aisle in a family heirloom. L'élite's tailors can modernize your antique dress. There's also a back room with discounted designs for those on tight budgets, as well as an annual sample sale in the spring. And lastly, the shop offers honest opinions—because somebody's got to tell the bride the truth.

276 Newbury St., Boston, 617-424-1010, lelite.com

Luiz Filho of HC Studio

Forget the aisle. It feels more like walking the red carpet when all eyes are on you. Luiz Filho, a hairstylist and makeup artist based out of HC Studio in Brookline Village, gives brides that signature, head-turning look. Filho reports that the current fad is two different styles—one for the ceremony (pinned up softly for a glamorous, no-effort effect) and another for the reception (often half up and half down). He works with what you've got, enhancing and perfecting (and touching up for photos). And he'll bring along a team if you book him for the whole wedding party.

30 Station St., Brookline, 617-291-8327, luzbeauty.com

PHOTOGRAPHER
Corinne Schippert

Massachusetts-born and New York–trained photographer Corinne Schippert revels in weddings and their pictorial possibilities. Her work is fresh, open and artistic, capturing expression, emotion and quirks to depict what's amazing about life and love. She shoots mainly digital (using film and a panoramic camera for epic shots) and prints in black-and-white and color. And she has a way with real moments like a couple cracking up, not just the posed pics.

INVITATIONS
Smudge Ink

GONE ARE THE DAYS when engraved invitations reigned as the only proper choice. In this era of personalization, high-quality options abound (even Costco has gotten in on the game). Letterpress stationery, at once old-fashioned and au courant with its vintage feel and three-dimensional effect, is quite popular, and Smudge Ink's designs separate it from the pack. The studio offers lush peonies, pop-off-the-page poppies, delicate Queen Anne's lace and silver starbursts. The selection is endless, as it's all customized to your taste.

50 Terminal St., Building 2, 2nd floor, Charlestown, 617-242-8228, smudgeink.com

PLACE TO REGISTER
Koo de Kir

Sure, Crate & Barrel and Bloomingdale's have the staples covered. But you don't want the same stuff as all your married friends. For funkier pieces like nesting lotus bowls, Koo de Kir is the place, with popular lines including Juliska tableware and John Robshaw linens. The Beacon Hill boutique, owned and curated by interior designer Kristine Irving, features a collection of home furnishings hip enough for now and classic enough for when you start to entertain.

65 Chestnut St., Boston, 617-723-8111, koodekir.com

PLANNER
Rafanelli Events

Bryan Rafanelli, Boston's very own Colin Cowie, is the planner to call upon for utter fabulousness. His firm takes a personal branding approach, reflecting the client's sensibility and vision with an eye toward the latest trends. They even do a demo of several possibilities from which to choose, with samples of lighting, linens, china, flowers and every other imaginable element. Rafanelli has done a Spanish-themed wedding with tapas and a flamenco band. He staged another couple's romantic first dance in a glass-enclosed room, with all the guests watching from the outside. In addition to the creative aspect, Rafanelli takes care of the mundane details, handling contracts, billing and the like.

142 Berkeley St., Boston, 617-357-1818, rafanellievents.com

RECEPTION VENUE
Mandarin Oriental

Come December, the Mandarin Oriental will be the hottest spot to tie the knot. That's when the much-anticipated hotel will start hosting affairs in the Oriental Ballroom. Imported from the landmark Hong Kong location, the chef will turn out dishes like crab claw with coriander, lime, ginger and tomato gelée and buckwheat blinis with crème fraîche. The setting sounds just as rich, from the blonde-satin wood to the buttery-silk walls. It oozes cachet.

800 Boylston St., Boston, 617-867-6501, mandarinoriental.com/boston

Emerge

Let the party begin—one month ahead of the wedding—with an aromatherapy facial. Then the day before, unwind with a manicure, pedicure, body wrap and massage. Also drop hints to your BFF that bridal showers here are heavenly, especially when catered on the roof garden. Consider a his-and-hers event (there's a Men's Club, too). And don't forget to book a haircut, massage and "sports manicure" for the groom.

Mayer of the City

HOMECOMING KING

Romantic entanglements with high-wattage celebrity babes like Jessica Simpson and Jennifer Aniston have made John Mayer a tabloid staple. So it's easy to forget that the onetime Berklee College of Music student is, in fact, a superb singer-songwriter. Grammys and multiplatinum albums aside, Mayer's signature breathy vocals and inspired pop hooks make for great music. It also doesn't hurt that's he's got the onstage charisma to win over grizzled critics and 16-year-old girls alike. Mayer returns to the Bay State July 12 to play a show with Brett Dennen at the Comcast Center.

KYLE WRIGHT

John Mayer performs at the Comcast Center July 12, 7:30 pm, $29.50–$59.50 (617-931-2000) ticketmaster.com

The Chronicles of Narnia: Prince Caspian ★ What a violent and ugly militaristic slog this is! Sucking all the wonder out of CS Lewis' novel, director Andrew Adamson blew $100 million on special effects without mustering a single memorable image. Even the sunlight is pale and wan as those bratty, fairly indistinguishable Pevensie children return to their formerly enchanted fairyland to find that 1,300 years have passed and everybody's trapped in some sort of downcast Bored of the Rings with a bit of Hamlet in there, too. Ben Barnes makes Orlando Bloom seem captivating as the tedious title character who seeks vengeance and leads chintzy elfin creatures against some disturbing, racially coded baddies. There's no surprise, delight or anything resembling levity here, just one grim battle after another rendered in Adamson's hacky medium shots and close-ups. The light-skinned true-believers slaughter legions of swarthy, bearded heathens, all in preparation for the second coming of a lion (Jesus, as voiced by Liam Neeson) who doles out some even meaner divine retribution. Onward, Christian soldiers. Next stop: the Crusades, or Iran. (In the suburbs.)

Encounters at the End of the World ★★★ After 40-odd years and 50-something films, Werner Herzog has investigated almost every obscure corner of the globe, so naturally his latest masterpiece sends him all the way to Antarctica. Turning his inquisitive gaze and persnickety voice-over narration on the residents of McMurdo Station, a tacky American outpost "complete with abominations like yoga classes," Herzog salutes the vagabond spirits exploring the bottom edge of the map. The director's voracious sampling of their research conjures a thriving ecosystem. We hear seals wailing what sound like Pink Floyd solos and savor some jaw-dropping underwater photography (by frequent Herzog collaborator Henry Kaiser), before finally standing on the edge of an active volcano. The title is double-edged, as all involved take a dim view of the planet's long-term prospects. But somehow Herzog's reverence for every last sign of life feels weirdly joyous and hopeful. This movie is an astounding, eye-opening experience. (At Kendall Square.)

Get Smart ★★ Missed it by that much. This isn't a half-bad comedy for about 40 minutes, but then the fool thing degenerates into a crummy, lugubrious action flick. A throwback not to Mel Brooks and Buck Henry's '60s TV staple, the latest misadventure of bumbling Agent 86 is more akin to lousy '80s capers like Spies Like Us, tossing aside promising comedic shenanigans in favor of bloated, overwrought chase sequences and boring pyrotechnics. Steve Carell provides a kinder, gentler take on Don Adams' undercover numbskull, playing nicely off of Anne Hathaway's too-young but competent Agent 99. Dwayne Johnson works a delightful self-deprecating goof on his former Rock persona, while the peerless Alan Arkin bats cleanup as their beleaguered boss. Sadly, director Peter Segal, who recently helmed the terrible remake of The Longest Yard, has no faith in his cast's comic prowess and throws the entire picture over to tedious shoot-outs and vehicular pandemonium. Sorry about that, chief. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

The Happening ★ Finally expunging any goodwill still left over from The Sixth Sense, writer-director M. Night Shyamalan's breathtaking career suicide arrives with this non-thrilling, anticlimactic environmental horror story. The comically miscast Mark Wahlberg stars as a sensitive science teacher on the run from an airborne plague that triggers violent suicides in all who dare inhale. The culprits happen to be a plethora of angry plants who've had it up to here with mankind's reckless pollution. You've never seen such silliness as Wahlberg and his ragtag band of survivors attempting to outrun the wind. The filmmaker's mannered close-ups and hushed silences long ago calcified into self-parody. It's a pity dynamic performers like Marky Mark, Zooey Deschanel and John Leguizamo are all directed to whisper their lines in the same numbed murmur. Shyamalan has never wavered from the stilted, funereal tone of his breakthrough hit, and his movies are growing increasingly airless as the storylines get goofier. He films dead people. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

The Incredible Hulk ★★ Director Ang Lee's 2003 artsy-fartsy take on the giant green guy was an epically wrongheaded effort, yet one that nonetheless contained some stray moments of real visual poetry. You'll find nothing of the sort in Louis Leterrier's just-the-facts-ma'am franchise reboot, which is about as assembly line–impersonal as superhero flicks get. Calling it a bad movie wouldn't be fair, as making a bad movie requires taking chances. A timid, obsequious apology to fanboys for what happened last time around, this streamlined Hulk cuts to the chase, ignoring Stan

CURIOUS. I can muster no better word to describe Hancock, a massive, oddly imbalanced summer blockbuster that, upon first glance, would seem a natural fit for Will Smith's patented, effects-laden, Fourth of July release. Ever since the abrupt and unforeseen implosions of Tom Cruise and Mel Gibson, Big Willie pretty much stands alone as the last surviving megastar. He is legend. So what the heck has he been up to lately?

Hancock is a strange, often confusing film. So much so that I'm already trying to convince myself it's better than it really is. Not just because I enjoy being contrary, but also because $150 million movies this peculiar don't come around often.

Smith stars as the title character, a drunken, amnesiac superhero who occasionally flies

Got a Bike? Gotta do the PMC

Before Lance, even before LeMond, there was the PMC, a 190-mile bike-a-thon that brought cycling to the American consciousness. Since 1980, the PMC has raised more than $204 million for cancer research. Today, 100 percent of every rider-raised dollar goes directly to that cause.

There are many challenges one could take on each year, but the PMC is in a class of its own. The payoff is much greater than simply testing one's own physical limits. Turns out that helping others is the greatest reward of all.

PMC 2008 – August 2 & 3 – 5,500 cyclists from 36 states and 6 countries will ride with the goal of raising $34 million for cancer research. Are you ready to take on the Pan-Mass Challenge?

around Los Angeles cockeyed and wasted, fighting crime while half in the bag and knocking over lots of expensive stuff like buildings. Hancock's such a shambling wreck, he can't even take flight without leaving massive divots in the street beneath him, which in this litigious age naturally makes him the defendant in a ton of property damage suits.

Pursing his lips into an unfriendly sneer and refusing to smile throughout the picture, Smith transforms himself into a surly hobo. Dressed in tatters and barking all sorts of just-this-side-of-PG-13 scatology, he isn't a charming-drunk superhero like Iron Man. He's more like the guy you avoid on the subway.

One fateful day, Hancock begrudgingly saves the life of Jason Bateman's Ray Embrey—a public relations guru naive and egocentric enough to believe that he can convince pharmaceutical corporations to give away drugs to poor countries for free. (As a nifty in-joke, disapproving Big Pharma honchos are played by executive producers Akiva Goldsman and Michael Mann.)

Embrey eventually adopts a new crusade: the PR rehabilitation of stumbling superhero John Hancock. There's more than a tinge of slick social satire going on here, as Bateman's deadpan directions to Smith's surly supreme being aren't so different from the way modern Jerry Maguires prep their athletes before locker-room interviews. Politics is perception, and in the hands of a gifted spin doctor like Embrey, even a bum like Hancock can sweet-talk his way into becoming a media darling.

So far, so funny. Director Peter Berg shoots Hancock's crazy superheroics with finesse and keeps everything grounded in a recognizable reality. The film is rougher around the edges than you'd expect, lending the outlandish proceedings a weird and gritty quasi-believability.

There's also nobody who does deadpan like Bateman, and his knack for passive-aggressively understating every line-reading bounces brilliantly off Smith's cantankerous refusal to play nice. Arrested Development junkies will also be thrilled by Bateman's reunion with his small-screen gal-pal Charlize Theron; their big-screen love affair bears a distinct whiff of their cuckoo sitcom subplot.

Here's where we run into trouble, as Hancock pivots on one giant, game-changing plot-twist that makes it impossible for me to discuss anything further. The movie jumps clear off the rails, going all kerflooey in ways everybody can nitpick but only a bastard would reveal.

Treading lightly here: There's no second act. But a quick Google search for test-screening reviews and filmmaker interviews reveals talk of a much weirder, dirtier film in earlier incarnations, before capitulations to market demands and the Movie Picture Association of America were made.

The project history starts in the 1990s, with first-timer Vincent Ngo's notoriously filthy, famously unfilmable script titled Tonight, He Comes, which was met with great acclaim but no takers. If my sketchy online information is correct, the porny title sprang from a revved-up superhero's inability to climax without inadvertently killing his female partner—a graphic yet logical extension of Kevin Smith's Mallrats rant about Superman accidentally tearing Lois Lane apart with his super-sperm.

Apparently, such dangerous orgasms played a key role in Hancock until just a few months ago. The film's extensive re-editing process has been brutal, with so many recuts required to avoid a commercially disastrous R rating that in a recent article Berg talked up several smutty scenes that are no longer even in the movie.

Hancock sort of peters out, eventually grinding to an unceremonious halt where a more massive ending was required. Every scene after the giant plot twist lacks the pushy aggravation of the earlier, funnier footage. But make no mistake: Hancock isn't as bad as the rumors would have you believe; it just ends right when it should be getting started.

So curious. ✖✖✖

Lee's still-potent psychological underpinnings in favor of special effects smackdowns. Leterrier is a boring yet competent craftsman who makes the most out of obvious soundstages and budget-conscious Canadian locations. But as far as recent comic flicks go, we're missing the crackling adult energy Robert Downey Jr. brought to Iron Man, or the grim sophistication of Christopher Nolan's Batman Begins. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Indiana Jones And the Kingdom of the Crystal Skull ★★★ I'm still not sure there's any reason for this film to exist, but the extremely belated return of Dr. Henry Jones Jr. turns out to be a perfectly serviceable nostalgia piece. Keeping the jokey, family-comedy vibe of 1989's The Last Crusade, only with sharper filmmaking and a softer script, this romp through Atomic Age signifiers boasts some striking, at times purposefully cheesy visuals, along with Steven Spielberg's peerless mastery of kinetic energy. It's a treat to watch Harrison Ford deliver an honest-to-God performance again, and he perks up considerably during the too-few scenes when he resumes his screwball bickering with Karen Allen's Marion Ravenwood. The stakes are low but the spirits high, and Spielberg keeps everything bouncing along so jauntily, it's hard to even be bothered that the mystical alien gobbledygook plot doesn't make any sense. Crystal Skull is far more concerned with tickling viewers' memories of the hat, the whip and that rousing John Williams trumpet fanfare. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Iron Man ★★★ "I'm not really the hero type," quips Robert Downey Jr. with a glint in his eye, helpfully summing up this picture's off-kilter appeal in a nifty nutshell. The movie itself is well-assembled, fairly standard stuff, and there's not a plot point that won't feel familiar if you've sat through any of the billion or so comic book adaptations released in the past 10 years. somehow, Downey's snarky presence in the lead makes it seem like a wonderful act of subversion. According to formula, Iron Man winds up playing it safe and hitting all the expected, crowd-pleasing beats, but the movie works best if you consider it as an outsized chronicle of its star's own recent redemption—one of those weird pop culture artifacts in which actors comment upon themselves and their careers. Like Lindsay Lohan's I Know Who Killed Me, except not horrible. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

The Love Guru ZERO STARS You know those awful SNL sketches that run at about 12:45 am after the producers figure everyone in the audience has either tuned out or fallen asleep? Imagine one of those stretched out to feature length. Mike Myers has devised his most grindingly unfunny character yet, a hirsute self-help counselor with a fondness for naughty acronyms and pee-pee jokes. Guru Pitka is never presented in a clear context, so we can't even tell if he's supposed to be a hero or a fraud. The movie is merely an oppressive delivery device for schoolyard-level double entendres and would-be catch phrases, all of which seem to involve urine, fecal matter or male genitalia. It's agonizing to endure this level of creatively bankrupt self-infatuation. After every inane utterance, Myers stares directly into the camera before tossing back his head and laughing uncontrollably at whatever he's just said. At least one person still finds Mike Myers amusing. Too bad it's Mike Myers. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Sex and the City ★ ½ A telling early shot finds Sarah Jessica Parker and friends with their noses smushed up against the display case of a $50,000 diamond ring, thus setting the tone for the following 135 minutes of covetous consumption. With five costume changes, even the opening credits are a parade of product placements. Calling the film light on plot would be generous. Carrie and Miranda are treated shabbily by longtime loves, so they spend an entire calendar year ignoring apologies and wallowing in self-pity while Charlotte and Samantha drop by for drinks. Meanwhile, there are fashions, labels and lavish living spaces. Luxury porn and brand-name loyalty haven't been this fetishized since American Psycho. Inexplicably longer than Letters From Iwo Jima, Sex and the City leaves you feeling sorry for these shallow women and their empty, avaricious lives. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

The Strangers ★★ First-time writer-director Bryan Bertino displays a tremendous knack for widescreen compositions but unfortunately little else in this grim technical exercise. Liv Tyler and Scott Speedman whimper effectively as a hapless yuppie couple besieged and tortured by masked home invaders, in what ultimately amounts to yet another remake of Funny Games, only missing the academic pedantry and contempt. Bertino and cinematographer Peter Sova are obvious students of early John Carpenter movies, as they eschew modern shock cuts in favor of classically constructed, languorous long shots, which allow background and foreground planes of action to work against one another in a truly unsettling fashion. But to what end? Mercilessly stripped down to the barest of bones, The Strangers doesn't have a plot, just an unfortunate situation. There's no subtext here—heck, there's hardly any text—only an empty, mechanical excellence. Bertino knows how to make a movie. All he needs is time to come up with a story, and we'll have someone to watch. (At Boston Common and in the suburbs.)

Wanted ★★★ ½ This rude, ultra-violent delight is an R-rated Harry Potter for sexually frustrated cubicle drones. Or maybe it's The Matrix but with a sick sense of humor. Either way, it's nuts. James McAvoy stars as a cuckolded office nebbish swept up into an ancient guild of supernaturally skilled assassins; after a bit of bloody training, the boy learns how to curve bullets with his mind. Taking orders from a sentient weaving loom (seriously), this crazy cabal of gunsmiths run gorgeously amok, driving cars on top of buses, knocking trains off their tracks and ducking zig-zag sniper fire. And then the exploding rats show up. Director Timur Bekmambetov discovers at least three dozen new ways to show a bullet ripping through a skull, but his best special effect is costar Angelina Jolie, who delivers a droll, nearly silent performance that's all dirty smirks and sex appeal. Wanted is bonkers, tasteless and morally questionable. It is also exceedingly well-crafted, lightning-paced and enormous fun to watch. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

War, Inc. ★ ½ John Cusack's heart is in the right place as he attempts to pen a pseudo-sequel to Grosse Pointe Blank that doubles as a Naomi Klein–ish exposé of plundering corporations in our age of military outsourcing. Again, Cusack suits up as a neurotic assassin with his sister Joan chewing the scenery as his loudmouth assistant. But any hope of satirical sophistication vanishes upon the arrival of Dan Aykroyd as a would-be Dick Cheney, perched on a toilet bowl and animatedly detailing the texture of his bowel movement. Cusack, alongside cowriters Mark Leyner and Jeremy Pikser, score a couple of decent cheap shots like a Rockettes kick line of amputees or the thwarted film-school aspirations of guys who shoot hostage-beheading videos, but the movie isn't nearly as smart as it thinks it is. Hilary Duff shows up for a confounding subplot as a Central Asian Britney Spears, and before long everything devolves into yet another vain excuse for Cusack to show off what a badass kickboxer he is. (At Kendall Square.)

You Don't Mess With the Zohan ★ ★ Admit it: You've been dying to hear Adam Sandler's take on Israeli-Palestinian relations, haven't you? Lurching between inspiration and inanity, this bizarre farce stars Sandler as a supernaturally skilled Mossad agent bored by the cycle of Middle Eastern strife. Tired of capturing and recapturing his archnemesis (played with reckless abandon by John Turturro), Zohan fakes his death and heads for America to fulfill his dream of becoming ■ hairstylist, even if that means taking a job on "the Palestinian side of the street." Briefly picking up plotlines only to drop them just as quickly, this overlong film eventually comes around to depicting a lovely world where everybody can get along and eat hummus together, if they only learn to communicate. Coscripted by Sandler, TV Funhouse genius Robert Smigel and the ubiquitous Judd Apatow, You Don't Mess With the Zohan has almost enough insightful throwaway gags to make you forget all the gross-out sex, penis jokes and Dennis Dugan's abysmal, inattentive direction. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Boston rockers Extreme measure up with a bold return to record and stage.

Extreme plays Bank of America Pavilion July 31.

IT'S BEEN 17 YEARS since Extreme shot to national fame with "More Than Words," an acoustic duet counter to the Boston band's trademark funk-metal. Naturally, singer Gary Cherone and guitarist Nuno Bettencourt will croon that hit when Extreme headlines the Bank of America Pavilion July 31.

"They would probably throw tomatoes at us if we didn't do that," Bettencourt says with a laugh of the romantic ballad largely responsible for turning 1990's Pornograffiti into a double-platinum album. "Sometimes I fight with some of my band members when they say that it's been a blessing and a curse. All that [hit] did was turn America onto the rest of the record. It made the band exist. It can't be a curse."

It's easy for him to be at ease these days. After a few reunion dates in recent years, Extreme is launching a world tour in support of its first album in 13 years.

"I want the music to dictate what we're going to do," says the guitarist-producer, calling Extreme "bad businessmen" for declining full-scale tours until the group made a new album. "That was one of the conditions we put on ourselves, that if we ever come back and do anything, it's not going to be some cheesy, bullshit, nostalgic, money tour."

The band's fastidious musical efforts could be blamed for a delay in the release of Saudades de Rock until Aug. 12. But based on an advance copy, the CD ranks with Extreme's best, honing the kind of torrential riffs, powerhouse vocals and driving rhythms that made the quartet into local heroes.

The album's name comes from the Portuguese word for "longing," says the Azores-born Bettencourt, 41. "One of the things [we discussed] was how much we missed rocking and rolling with Extreme and that chemistry—and through the years, we'd always get stuff from fans saying, 'Please come back!'"

So after separate projects that included bumpy stints in Van Halen for Cherone and Perry Farrell's Satellite Party for Bettencourt, Extreme is back. In addition to bassist Pat Badger, the band now sports drummer Kevin Figueiredo, who played in both Satellite Party and Bettencourt's solo vehicle DramaGods (long before that, the two also played hockey together while growing up midstate in Hudson).

To give fans a taste of the CD, Extreme has been streaming the lead track, "Star," on its MySpace page. The cautionary take on stardom opens with rocket-channeled harmonies before it swings into riff-rock that echoes Queen's "Tie Your Mother Down" in its melodic turns and over-the-top attitude.

"It was unconscious, but obvious to us," Bettencourt says of the Queen nod, comparing Extreme's classic influences (which also include Led Zeppelin, the Beatles, Van Halen and the Who) to food ingredients. "Pretty much every restaurant uses those same ingredients," he says. "The influence is there and we wear it on our sleeves all the time. We're not ashamed of it. We're more proud of it than anything."

> "There's a bit of a famine out there for rock in general," Bettencourt says.

The CD adds stylistic shifts in the piano ballads "Ghost" (with a well-crafted orchestral buildup) and "Peace," where Cherone's raw emoting suggests Audioslave's Chris Cornell gone gospel. And "Take Us Alive" injects a crisp country shuffle that Bettencourt calls "our bionic 'Hole Hearted,'" referring to 1991's follow-up hit to "More Than Words."

So does he expect both old and new fans to go old-school with Extreme in 2008? "It doesn't really matter to me who comes out, because, without being egotistical or pompous, when you talk about an 'old-school' record, what's the 'new school?'" he says. "There's a bit of a famine out there for rock in general. I don't think anyone is going to perceive it as old or new or whatever. It's just going to be, 'Wow, this is guitar-based rock 'n' roll. It's been a while.'"

It's certainly been a while for Extreme, who disbanded in 1996 after Bettencourt left for a solo career. "My heart just wasn't there," he says. But he kept in contact with Cherone, and things flowed when they got to cowriting. "You need to see the world for yourself sometimes, to travel and try some different things," Bettencourt says from his L.A. home. "You realize, maybe the most important thing I've had was always in the backyard, in my hometown." ✖✖✖

Ms. Motown

If the Blues Fits

Detroit native Janiva Magness, commanding the confidence of Aretha and the nasally resonance of Janis (with more voice lessons), brings a soulful sound to the Regattabar in Cambridge on July 9. This award-winning singer shares the ups and downs of her complex Motown history. Magness recently headlined Bluzapalooza, the first blues concert tour to perform for American troops in Iraq and Kuwait. Her newest album, What Love Will Do, features a smooth combination of original tunes and older classics by greats like Tina Turner and Marvin Gaye. Sometimes it hurts to hear it through the grapevine, but she's worth checking out. Jenna Valentino

Rockie Horoscope { ROCKIE GARDINER }

QUIT BEING CRABBY

[JUNE 21–JULY 22]
Some Moon Children will be able to celebrate their birthdays without a care in the world—except maybe what to do about all the gifts they receive, particularly those from significantly generous significant others. Yet some will be saddled with responsibilities both real and imagined: "Did everyone get enough to eat?" "Who's driving you home?" A compassionate Crab on a guilt trip can easily suck the air out of a room—not a good thing when there are wishes to make and candles to blow out.

LEO [July 23–August 22]
A sense of what the next hazy, lazy days of summer will bring can kick in as soon as pleasure-loving Venus enters Leo on July 12. Until then, you'll have to make due with the myriad possibilities you envision when your creative sun ruler gets a peek at Jupiter's extensive gift list. Being able to look into the future, especially through rose-colored glasses, is just one of them. The annual sun-Jupiter opposition rarely occurs while you're preparing to celebrate another birthday; therefore, the weeks leading up to this one could be special.

VIRGO [August 23–September 22]
Making up for lost time? Not yet. Not until your Mercury ruler advances well past the point at which it turned retrograde on Memorial Day. Best to wait until the Messenger leaves the Twins altogether and crosses over to the Crab on July 10 before digging into a new project. But once you do, plan to move fairly quickly. That transit lasts for only a short fortnight. Once Mercury enters the Lion's den—i.e., your karmic 12th house—it'll be a lot harder to maintain control. The visit to the Virgin starts on Aug. 10.

LIBRA [September 23–October 22]
Right about now you could feel torn between two equally attractive choices: one impacting your reputation outside the house, the other your clout at home. More than any other sign, Libra knows how important it is to keep a foot in each camp, to maintain a sense of balance. Or to appear as if you're giving both alternatives equal weight. Although we know you're going to do whatever you damn well please, we also know that, because gigantic Jupiter is involved, the Scales could be leaning in favor of the family.

SCORPIO [October 23–November 21]
It's been two years since you had to maneuver around an obstacle as problematic as the one currently blocking your way. If you recall what occurred in July 2006, when your Mars coruler last ran into Saturn, you should be able to figure out how to bypass the restrictions Saturn imposes. One thing in your favor: Their conjunction takes place in Virgo, a well-informed, health-conscious earth sign that gladly lends support to the Scorpion. This wasn't the case when they met in fiery Leo, a fixed sign as stubborn as your own.

SAGITTARIUS [November 22–December 21] Archers born in November have the nasty Mars-Saturn conjunction in early Virgo directly in their sightline. Going in for the kill? Worried that you'll be wounded in the process? Getting out of the way seems the sensible thing to do, but if your reputation is at stake (Virgo governs your career house), you might opt to fight. Even though you're up against the God of War and the Great Satan, remember that, especially for the literate and the brave, the pen dipped in vitriol is mightier than the sword.

CAPRICORN [December 22–January 20]
While other signs may rue the day that macho Mars teams up with your Saturn ruler, for Caps, having another set of balls to help fight your current battle can be a blessing. Mars should add bite and heat to what, so far, has been a well-constructed and polite Virgo presentation. In the long run you'll be rewarded by your fellow earth signs, but not until the next time Saturn trines generous Jupiter in your sign, like they did in January. How does the first Monday Night Football game of the 2008 season strike you?

AQUARIUS [January 21–February 18]
Granted that having imaginative Neptune in your sign has helped you wax poetic when the occasion arose, but what has access to so much rhythm brought you besides more blues? You'll have another opportunity to explore the highs and lows of true romance after Venus enters your Leo house of partners on July 12. Will the seasonal visit from the goddess of beauty leave you drained, or will you be inspired to create a work of art we can read about or view or dance to all winter long? Try to go easy on the exaggerations, okay?

PISCES [February 19–March 19]
Throw in the towel. There's not much use in continuing to struggle against the opposition, not after militaristic Mars joins the Saturnian establishment in your Virgo house of significant others. Best to relax and let the other guys accomplish whatever it is they plan to do. Know that this dynamic duo could be strategizing like crazy until their meeting on July 10 is history. However, if you want the services of a well-oiled machine, with all the technical knowledge currently available as backup, be your own charming self and ask, pretty please.

ARIES [March 20–April 19]
The biannual conjunction of your energetic Mars ruler with Saturn could feel daunting, but while Mr. Macho and Mr. Management merge on July 10 in perfection-seeking Virgo, the ambitious Aries may realize that you've bitten off more than you can or, at that point, want to chew. Too much work or too many bosses? Health practitioners and service providers, especially those with sensitive stomachs, should keep an eye on their own body parts. Virgo is known for its gut-wrenching experiences; plus, salmonella is running rampant this summer.

TAURUS [April 20–May 20]
Before your sociable Venus ruler runs off to play with the lions, give the goddess one more chance to bring something interesting or someone new into your life. Her rewarding relationship with Uranus, the planet of progress, could do wonders for a Bull who has been content to nestle in the cozy comforts of Cancer since the last full moon. Just remember that cavorting with capricious felines, a practice confined to the summer months, means there'll be more scratches and hisses from the misses in the family.

GEMINI [May 21–June 20]
Nobody wants to hear "I told you so!" So on July 10, when Mars and Saturn, the classic "malefics" of astrology, join forces in picky Virgo at the nadir of your chart, don't complain that you weren't warned. Because the Twins can go either way where advice is concerned, to heed or to seek another opinion, it's possible that you'll circumvent the problem entirely. Or, since you're such a buoyant air sign, rise above it. Except for a twinge of jealousy masquerading as a power play, there are no other clouds on the horizon.

The event celebrated the re-opening of the legendary pub considered by many as "America's First Sports Bar" and "Birthplace of Red Sox Nation." Guests were entertained by the Bunker Hill Pipes & Drums while enjoying a full premium open bar and delicious passed hors d'oeuvres.

REALITY DINING

Table for Eight (866-822-5348 or www.tableforeight.com) is a social introduction service.

Table for Eight replicates the way people used to meet by bringing people physically together to dine. Indeed, many members of this 20-year-old service are disillusioned on-line daters who are tired of the cat-and-clicking-mouse games of such contacts and their frequent deceptions. Table for Eight people span in age from late-20s to late-40s, with a smattering of baby boomers. Typical members have been busy cultivating their professional lives with an income averaging $73,000, perhaps figuratively married to their career but now considering the corporeal variation: 85 percent haven't been married yet and are childless. The actual table located at a restaurant like Sibling Rivalry, Cucci Cucci or Le Mistral—must be round, no harsh, excluding edges. This serendipity of strangers brought together has been compared to the gemütlich flavor of wedding reception dinners. You can dine with such scintillating types as physicians, lawyers, psychologists, and teachers and scientists from local prestigious universities. An initial phone interview involving 60 questions screens members and identifies interests, views and preferences. Although friendship and networking are benefits of dining with new people, Table for Eight also boasts at least 60 engagements, that they know of, that have resulted from their restaurant get-togethers in the last five years.

BIG PAPI & BIG TALKERS

Frances Rivera and Carolyn Campanelli at the Children's Champion Award Dinner

I Still Love You, Brandon...

Apparently, I missed my calling. I should have been an auctioneer.

At least, that's what a lot of nice people said when I served as guest auctioneer at the Commonwealth Shakespeare Company's fundraiser at the Liberty Hotel to raise money for this summer's production of As You Like It on the Common.

It was a smallish crowd in a smallish room, which made my job easier, since it was harder for people like Brandon Rudat from WHDH-TV Channel 7 to stand in the corner chatting, although he still did.

He also refused to bid on the theater tickets I tried to shame him into buying, later confiding that he doesn't particularly like the theater, which makes me wonder exactly what he was doing there—besides talking during the live auction, that is.

Anyway, a lot of other people who do love the theater were very generous, and it was a chance to hobnob with the likes of Mass. Film Office grand poobah Nick Paleologos, the delightful and delectable Jill Goldweitz and Susan Friedman, best-selling novelist Stephen McCauley, North Shore nabobs Alex Westerhoff and Tom Lang, and New York hipster transplants Don Carney and John Ross, a two-man design collective who got there too late to chat during the live auction but still early enough to have a drink and a nice talk.

In the end, the evening netted something like $10,000, which isn't too shabby, especially with Brandon Rudat from Channel 7 chatting the whole time and not bidding on theater tickets.

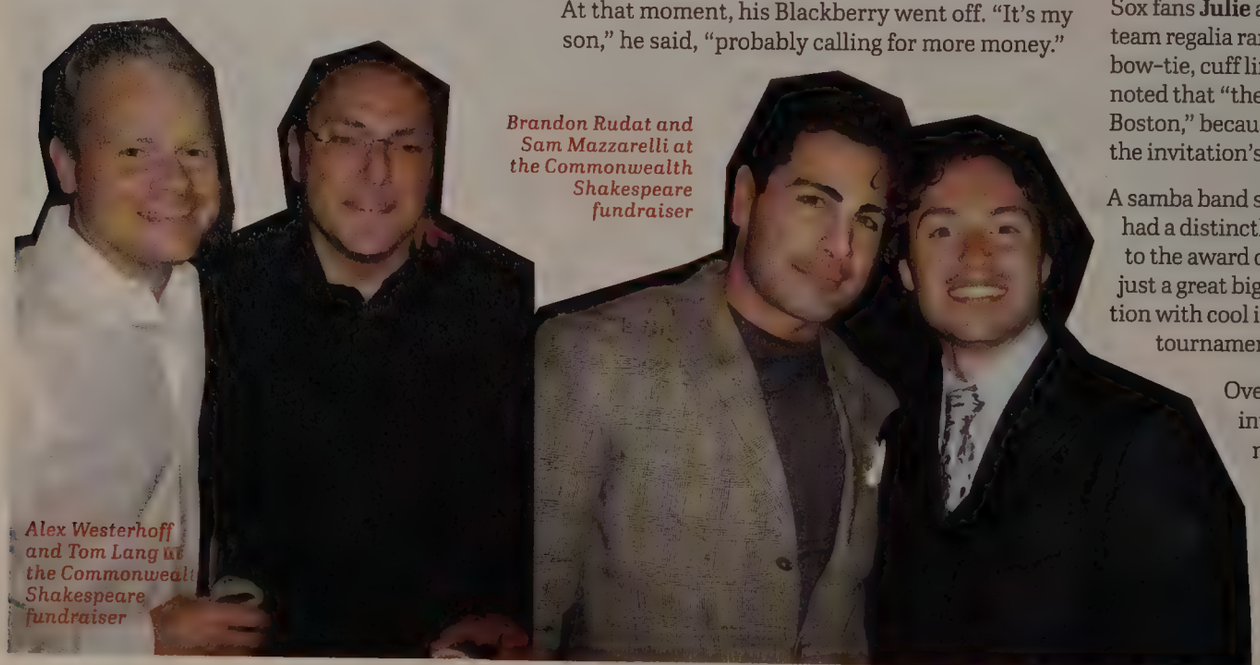
I wonder if Christy's is accepting applications.

What Has It Got in Its Pocketses?

So you're a banking bigwig like Joe Campanelli, CEO of Sovereign. What does such a Master of the Universe carry around in his pockets? We cornered him at a recent party to find out.

"My Blackberry," he said. "A money clip that my son gave me, and now I know why. He keeps taking money out of it. Other than that, just my hands."

At that moment, his Blackberry went off. "It's my son," he said, "probably calling for more money."



Brandon Rudat and Sam Mazzarelli at the Commonwealth Shakespeare fundraiser

Alex Westerhoff and Tom Lang at the Commonwealth Shakespeare fundraiser

Thank goodness for the First National Bank of Dad. Now, exactly how do I open an account?

Water Under the Bridge...

"There's no crying in baseball!"

That was Tom Hanks' most memorable line from A League of Their Own, but try telling that to Big Papi. The honoree at UNICEF's Children's Champion Award Dinner, held at the Four Seasons, David Ortiz actually shed a few tears while accepting the honor.

It was a touchingly human moment in an otherwise über-elegant evening, which began with a VIP reception at Aujord'hui, where a lot of VVIPS milled around looking VI. Among them: Sox brass John Henry and Tom Werner, former and present WHDH-TV anchors Caterina Bandini and Frances Rivera, party pair Bill and Alli Achtmeyer, Red Sox wife Ashley Papelbon, Cambridge socialites Bill and Sally Fay Cottingham (sporting a loaner necklace worth $250K), mattress pusher Eliot Tatelman of Jordan's Furniture, the soignée Betsy Caraboolad, white-hot New York jewelry designer Mish Tworkowski, die-hard Red Sox fans Julie and Doug McRae—decked out in team regalia ranging from a pendant and ring to a bow-tie, cuff links and studs—and one guest who noted that "there can't be a single red dress left in Boston," because most of the women had followed the invitation's suggestion of wearing the color.

A samba band serenaded guests into dinner, which had a distinctly Dominican flair, and in addition to the award ceremony (where Ortiz proved he's just a great big teddy bear), there was a live auction with cool items like a trip to his charity golf tournament in the Dominican Republic.

Overheard during cocktails: Trying to introduce another guest to an older, married couple, a man said, "Do you know each other?" to which the woman replied, "Yes. I crashed their car in high school." ×××

Taken for a Ride

I walk to work, but my husband drives 50 miles a day. So we've felt the sting of rising gas prices. It's a reality familiar to Ezra Dyer—a motorhead who drinks engine lube for breakfast. This issue, Ezra pits an Infiniti against a ferry to determine the best way to reach the Cape. He also recommends four fuel-efficient cars for your own beach trips.

With aerodynamic models in mind, we photographed gymnast and CoverGirl Alicia Sacramone for the front of the magazine. From Winchester, Mass., Sacramone hopes to win gold at the Summer Olympics in Beijing. Watch for her vault and floor routines—and her manicured nails (her mother owns a salon on Newbury).

KEEPING IT WHEEL

According to limo driver Gary Broughton, the biggest challenge in navigating a stretch Cadillac around Boston is painfully predictably – parking. "If I'm going to Fenway, you can only park in certain areas," says Broughton, a veteran chauffeur for New England–based Rockstar Limo. "The police come through and move cars. Sometimes I do a drop-off and then drive around for the whole game because I can't actually park."

The eternal battle for a street meter isn't his only headache. Stretches aren't ideally suited for squeezing through the upgraded cow paths of, say, the North End. But at least business is good, despite the economy.

"Our business has actually increased over [the] last year," says Broughton, who cites an upswing in corporate clients—the classic, black-sedan types. Celebrities, too, favor black sedans and Escalade SUVs. White stretches are for weddings, extravagant nights on the town, "maybe going to a Celtics game."

Broughton, 52, has been at the wheel for 30 years, and he's seen it all. "I had Tiger Woods," he says. "He was a regular sedan. I had Oprah Winfrey in a stretch. I had Paul Pierce in a stretch. I took him and his wife to New York City for a couple nights' stay at the Four Seasons."

In his off-hours, Broughton favors a Ford 6.0 diesel pickup. "It costs $5 a gallon," he laughs. "But I never drive it. It's always parked at the office."

Drink of the Moment

Fizz-ness School

Gaslight's bar manager, Bill Codman, claims to hold a pragmatic view toward bartending. "My philosophy is: It's a drink," Codman says. Patrons needn't know a cocktail's genealogy before they're deemed worthy to consume it.

His frank words belie a more frolicsome attitude toward bartending, one nearly crushed in the snow of the Rockies. An avid boarder, he previously tended bar in Park City, where the liveliness of cocktails has been sucked out with all the pageantry of a gangrene bloodletting. "That's a martini in Utah," he says, plonking a shot glass down on the bar. "It's really bad."

As he shoots flames with a match and an orange rind (for the burnt orange essence of the Rose of Provence, $7.50), it's clear that while Codman may not see cocktails as an exalted subject for study, he enjoys inventing them. This attention to craft may have been cultivated while working at No. 9 Park. "Those guys make amazing drinks, and I think that's what pushed me with my own creations and thinking of balance of flavors," he recalls.

One of his new summer concoctions is the 5 Grape Fizz ($10), a mix of five muddled white grapes, Ciroc (made from grapes and distilled five times), peach liqueur and soda. "It's almost like a deconstructed Bellini," he explains. "It has the bubbles, it has the booze, and it has the peach."

Knitted into the Ciroc, the grape juice provides the Fizz a flavorful summer punch that transitions into an easy peach finish. Chunks of fruit float like catfish in the murky bottom, fodder for a dawdling straw on a relaxed August afternoon. "You can have a conversation and you don't even know you're playing with it," Codman says. "It's meant to be a fun, refreshing patio drink." Just an easy summer cocktail. No more, no less.

Good Eats

Gone Fishin'

Shepherd's pie, crisp cod fillets and chips wrapped in yesterday's news—these are public-house staples. But at her rough-hewn Brookline Village watering hole, owner Siobhan Carew adds to that roster with traditional (yet rarely seen) Irish fare like a trio of farmhouse platters. Our favorite features fish done three ways: smoky chunks of potted whitefish; buttery slabs of smoked salmon; and tapas-inspired salt cod fritters. The latter, bursting with creamy cod, match perfectly with the accompanying watercress-cabbage slaw and taste better than butter on a slice of the house-made soda bread.

Question for Max Davidson at Phil's Towing in Cambridge

What are the top three reasons people have their cars towed?

1. RAN OUT OF GAS With gas prices on the rise, more and more people postpone the pump until it's too late and wind up calling Phil's for a lift. "That's a biggie this year," Davidson says. "People can't afford the gas and they're running on empty."

2. LOCKED KEYS IN CAR Forgetfulness in today's fast-paced world—along with that pesky automatic lock—leaves many people banging on the window staring at their car keys in the ignition. "People are always locking themselves out. They're two steps ahead and one backwards," he explains.

3. FLAT TIRES "Flat tires are an everyday occurrence. There's always a flat to be changed. People hit the curb or run over a nail, and they're stranded."

Going Out

A Good Aura

Hotels have a frenetic atmosphere, especially one as labyrinthian as the Seaport. "It's a different animal," acknowledges Rachel Klein, former chef at Om and now head of Aura restaurant and Tamo bar. It's a new world for Klein—one with an herb garden by the mezzanine and a walk-in fridge big enough for a square dance. It's also a place devoid of a chef's normal sense of autonomy. Corporate channels rule the venue's redesign, artwork comes approved from the hotel curator, and even dining tweaks require a committee's approval. "Just to change the menu on a nightly whim, you have to check with the computer programmer and the out-of-house printer."

There are over a dozen menus in all—from breakfast à la carte to overnight room service—the pages thick like a stone tablet detailing how to please any taste at any time. "At my last restaurant, I knew my clientele; they were foodies," says Klein. "Here you have that, but you have guests of the hotel, people here for weddings, businesspeople for conventions. You have so many groups that you have to make happy."

Locals may be surprised to see bar options like cheese fries ($6) and a trio of sliders ($8) from a chef with a reputation built on clean presentations. But the woman known for dishes like a deconstructed Caesar salad doesn't shun such food. "I'm a really big fan of that kind of stuff," assures Klein. "I like to take that diner deliciousness and serve it in an upscale environment."

Outside of a separate steakhouse section, the dinner menu is where concessions come to a stop. "Dinner, I focus on foodies," Klein explains. "Dinner is my baby, and I kind of do whatever I want." New dishes include a Hawaiian kampachi crudo ($14), while mainstays like steak and eggs ($39) and emperor tamo tofu ($24) will please Klein fans and rearm critics of her portions and impulse to compartmentalize her platings. "I dig on stuff like that," says Klein. "Do I like to mess with people? Sometimes. You have to challenge people, too, but not be egotistical about it. I've become a lot more lighthearted in my years. I used to be a lot more insane."

IN-FLIGHT FRIEND

TO NORM: Thanks for the great conversation during the flight home from Nantucket to Boston. And thank you for the ride home to Boston's South End. It's nice to see that true gentlemen still exist in this crazy world we live in. I forgot to ask for your business card to write a proper thank-you. Hope you read The Improper and see this.

Donna

To the mother yanking her three children around on leashes while getting ice cream:

I know that having children is hard. OK, maybe I don't know personally, but I've been told. While I think that making a child wear a leash is incredibly demeaning and unnecessary, I could maybe accept for a second that you've had some sort of child-kidnapping scare or something. You may have thought that buying leashes that look like monkeys clutching onto your kids' backs would seem cute and cuddly, but it does not detract from the fact that you are ultimately treating your kids like farm animals. I doubt the monkey will ever make up for the amount of humiliation they feel when they realize that the other kids on the playground aren't tied up. Whatever your reasoning, please act more like a concerned parent than an irritated pet sitter. Just because you put a leash on your child like a dog does not give you the right to treat them as such. When the kid walks away from you, there is no need to pull her back like a misbehaving canine, causing her to fall on to the pavement and almost drop her kiddie cone. Afterward, you grabbed your older son's face and told him you were "this close to knocking him out." If this is the way you speak to and act toward your kids, I'm guessing you have a plethora of issues that a leash will never solve.

Sincerely,
Still Concerned

To concert organizers:

Upon receiving a text message from my sister saying that the Hold Steady was playing a free concert, you can imagine my excitement as a cheap, 20-year-old music fanatic. So I immediately checked online, scouring the Internet for more details. Then I saw the phrase every person my age loathes: "21+." Why am I, a devoted music fan who attends concerts regularly, being punished for my age? It is nothing less than ageism that music venues prevent those under 21 from seeing their favorite bands. So before I give my money to the fake ID market, money that would be better invested in concerts and CDs, I would ask those in charge to reconsider before slapping on the "21+" criterion.

Anonymous

Dearest Jennifer:

You are CRAZY. I didn't think people like you really existed. If only you'd a) stop stalking me on Facebook; b) stop calling me; and c) stop e-mailing me, maybe I could stop wishing you'd be flattened all over downtown by an impatient MBTA bus driver. The fact that I'm dating him shouldn't bother you anymore if you were normal, but you're not. It has been almost two years and it's obvious to everyone but you. So why do you still contact me every six weeks, you blonde psychopath? Perhaps I will get a restraining order since I've saved every threatening, trashy message you've sent and have eye-witness evidence of you shoving me down his stairs and throwing a glass beer bottle at my head. Oh, and have a pleasant day!

ASK THE EXPERT

Q: HOW MANY MILES DO YOU HAVE LEFT IN YOUR CAR ONCE THE GAS WARNING ILLUMINATES?

LARRY D. RUBENSTEIN OF WBZ CAR DOCTORS IN PEABODY

Although you should never let your gas get low enough to cause the fuel warning light to come on, you can figure you will have approximately 10 percent of your fuel tank volume left in the tank. For example, a 20-gallon tank's light will go on when there are two gallons remaining. On a vehicle that gives 25 miles to the gallon, you'll get about 50 more miles of driving time. Although this rule doesn't hold true for every manufacturer, that seems to be the average on today's cars. I always advise my customers to not let the gas tank get lower than one-quarter of a tank at any given time. You stand a good chance of destroying your fuel pump by letting it run dry, which can cost $500 or more to fix depending on your car's year, make and model.

On a crime thriller and arresting art

Whack in the Box

IN THE DISTRICT ATTORNEY'S office, supposedly the land of truth and justice, many personalities swirl around with their own agendas. At least they do in Raffi Yessayan's suspense novel. Some doctrinairely want to engineer convictions, while others view their defendants from a softer spot. Ambition and vulnerabilities rooted in a lawyer's background multiply the ambiguities. Assistant DA Conrad Darget is one powerful player, mentoring a law student (whom he's also dating). Mitch, a black man adopted by a rich white man who killed himself, horrifyingly watches a client do the same. Detective Angel Alves, hungry for success, sees the ball of ambition bouncing painfully off his family. Meanwhile, they're all after the Blood Bath Killer. His "vics" are women whose bodies are never found—only their red-watery bathtubs. We follow murderer Richter, whose ice-cold diabolical inner narratives, buttressed by Nietzschean declarations on power, justify his serial killing of young, female professionals. Yessayan skillfully gives us the underside; Richter was a sensitive boy raised by a sadistic father who toughens up and wards off shame by becoming a master sadist himself. It's a thrilling read.

Former Suffolk County assistant DA Raffi Yessayan's first novel, Eight in the Box, is a legal thriller set in Boston.

A Colorful Past

THE SWEET SMALLNESS of Somerville's Prince Gallery actually enhances the vivid beauty of its pictures. They include authentic vintage prints, maps, leafy watercolor paintings of Somerville and reproduction posters. These are mostly colorful European advertisements—big, bold and worthy of the term "Art." Against a lusciously orange background, the words "Tom Cat" label an intense feline who's apparently advertising lemons. In another, a stack of three black fedoras suggests that a trio of energetic men have prancingly tossed them onstage. A Bugatti sportscar driver rushes Gatsby-like across another large poster-space in blurry speed, goggled, leather-capped, a scarf whipping around his neck while his sidecar-date exudes joyful flirtatiousness. Maps graciously display Newton of yore, and one showing Boston meanders in a dreamy, arty, nearly abstract way. Risko's sophisticated sketches caricature Woody Allen (tattooed with his wives' names) and the debonair Cole Porter. An 1898 Michelin Man is charmingly daffy, and ahead of its time. Prince also does attractive custom framing—all wood, no plastic or metal.

Prince Gallery (361 Highland Ave., Somerville; 617-851-1635) sells posters, maps and prints at reasonable prices. They also do framing.

WHERE THE GHOSTS ARE TOAST

Metaphysical makeover at Marliave

When Scott Herritt began renovating the old Cafe Marliave, he had to meet the standards of inspectors... and, he suspects, a few resident ghosts who haunt the 19th-century building at 10 Bosworth St., between Tremont and Washington.

"Some of the old staff say it was haunted," Herritt explains. "They heard music and laughter from the third floor." But the restoration and remodeling seem to have placated the spirits, because he hasn't heard a peep.

"It looks like I'll be open in early August," says Herritt, also the chef/owner of Grotto on Beacon Hill.

The new Marliave features a casual raw bar on the first floor, a barroom on the second and a third-floor dining room with a menu including entrees($25-$45) like butter-poached lobster, halibut in a salt crust and rack of lamb. A far cry from the 10-cent wine specials back in 1895.

For years the site of countless important dates, L'Espalier has announced a significant date of its own: On Aug. 30, the Back Bay landmark will serve its last dinner on Gloucester Street but will reopen two weeks later (Sept. 15) on Boylston Street at the new Mandarin Oriental, Boston hotel and residences. The distinctive wrought-iron entrance is making the trip, but the truly moveable feast is the famous garden, where herbs flourished and staffers sneaked cigarettes.

"We're moving all our herbs and perennials to our adopted farm, Ox Farm in Concord," says chef/owner Frank McClelland. In addition to herbs, tomatoes and vegetables, farmer Peter Merrill—formerly a pastry chef at Sel de la Terre—will raise chickens especially for the new L'Espalier. There's no passing the cluck here.

Speaking of SDLT, L'Espalier's sister restaurant will also open a new spot at the Oriental in an adjoining space on the same date. The original State Street location will remain open.

Subtle-cheese So you think you know blue cheese. Semi-soft. Streaked or spotted with deep-navy veins. And often stinky. But the mini wheel of Hubbardston Blue from Westfield Farm challenges all that. As opposed to traditional versions, which fit the category based on their interior color, this aged chèvre sports a milky-white core, tastes cleaner and faintly earthy, and hints at the hue of its bloomy, blue-gray rind. It's the favorite kid of this mostly–goat cheese farm's repertoire, though fresh spreads like herb-garlic and even the tangy chocolate log are equally tempting.

A SHIRE THING

Scampo's starters and pastas shine.

TO MANY, Lydia Shire is a culinary icon. That's absurd. To me, an icon is dead and lifeless. Shire is vital and vibrant. She was very much in evidence on a recent Monday evening at Scampo, her newest restaurant at the Liberty Hotel in Beacon Hill. Supervising the sometimes superlative work in the kitchen, bringing out plates to set in front of diners and casting a critical eye on presentations plated by the staff, she displays boundless energy.

The "mozzarella bar" in front of the open kitchen provides a stimulating vantage point for the preparation and assembly of many of Scampo's appetizers. Nearby, a capacious horseshoe bar and a dozen high cocktail tables seat about 40, while well-spaced tables dressed with off-white linens hold another 100 diners, nearly 40 of which occupy a quasi-private space that can be closed off for parties. Dark paneling alternates with exposed bricks, while illumination emanates from stalactite crystal chandeliers and red copper globes. Outside the doors, patio seating beckons in good weather.

I found Scampo's strong suit to be its appetizers and pastas. To start, the waitress brought crisp, salted bread sticks or grissini, together with a delectable puree of green fava beans, garlic, pignoli nuts and fresh basil. Fried artichokes ($12) proved an unexpected treat. Diminutive and delicate, they arrived with a flavorful pool of warm hummus. Tender, they were edible from stem to heart, which was a good thing because there were only two of them. White clam and bacon pizza ($15) supplied more calories, and in felicitous fashion. This Mediterranean combination added zesty hot pepper rings and fresh greens. The impeccably thin, crisp crust completed the first-rate ensemble. From a selection of housemade mozzarella offerings, I chose the peach and pistachio pesto ($9). Attractively presented on a long, rectangular white platter, three thick slices of creamy cheese alternated with thin slices of mellow-sweet peach, generous smears of nutty, minty pesto and razor-thin slices of radish. Ciccio ($7) was the only disappointing starter. This stuffed, pan-fried bread turned out dry, its promised filling of cheese quite sparse.

Scampo's pastas delighted almost without exception. Risi e bisi ($14), a Venetian risotto, combined a flavorful vegetable stock, butter and olive oil with arborio rice, peas, cheese and a touch of garlic, at once creamy and al dente. Spaghetti carbonara ($14), only slightly less al dente, boasted a rich, cheesy sauce punctuated by peas and large nuggets of robust pancetta. Ricotta, parsley and brown butter filled hat-shaped cappellacci ($14), a pasta associated with the Northern Italian city of Ferrara. Toasted walnuts provided a texture counterpoint.

LYDIA'S SHIRE Risi e bisi delights, and the horseshoe-shaped bar offers ample space for dining and imbibing.

Cappellacci

The quibble with the pastas came from the slightly over-cooked spaghetti in the Bolognese ($16), which was compensated by the meaty sauce. Uncharacteristically, the server brought the dish without offering cheese, but this was remedied on request, with repeated visits to offer more.

Main courses at Scampo didn't achieve the high standards of what preceded them. Most disappointing, the cod scaloppini with cockles and crab ($29) came inundated with garlic, and the two filets had been overcooked to a soft, almost mushy texture. The slightly gamey flavor of the cherry charred duck ($30), enhanced by the tart-sweet fruit, was flawed as well by texture, with its breast tough and borderline dry. The brick chicken ($24) proved the best of the trio of secondi I sampled over three visits.

Scampo's wine list, thin in the lower price range, offered a decent Hahn Merlot by the glass ($8), while the 2002 Marco Felluga Merlot from Friuli ($35 a bottle) represented a step up in substance and complexity. The tiramisu ($9), a well-constructed version of the classic, challenged our commitment to share because of its modest size. Service shined on all three of my visits, save the inadvertent cheese lapse. Scampo is Italian slang for "escape," continuing the Liberty Hotel's quest to remind patrons they're in a former jail. I, for one, was happy to stay put. ×××

FLAWS 'N EFFECT

When buying a house, spend good money on the home inspector. He's worth it.

WELL, IT'S HAPPENED once again. Heather and I went to look at open houses, and the next thing we knew we were signing the offer papers. It looks like we're gonna be moving to Quincy (or, as I call it, living the dream). And barely two days after laying eyes on the new house, I was standing on the front lawn with the home inspector, preparing for a thorough, candid examination of the future Casa de Dyer. After a top-to-bottom inspection, I've got good news: The place is a dump!

The home inspector found termites, a dangerously decrepit door, broken windows, hornets, broken siding and an ill-supported roof. And that's just the garage. I always envisioned my garage as a place to hang out and do guy stuff like work on cars and skin animals, but it appears that my garage will be best-suited as a set piece for a movie about a Depression-era shantytown. As the home inspector wandered around the garage, frowning and noting safety conditions that wouldn't be tolerated in a Chinese toy factory, I smiled because he was giving me something that every buyer craves, even in today's market—leverage.

I look at it this way: If you're going to find out all the things that are wrong with your house, better to find them out before you actually own it, when you can use the information to put the screws to the outgoing owners. Realistically, you end up ignoring about 95 percent of the problems anyway, but that doesn't mean you shouldn't exaggerate those problems in the most hysterical way possible.

Our current condo, for instance, evidently has a few outlets that are wired with reversed polarity. I still don't understand what that means or why it's bad. But four years ago, when we bought our place, I indignantly insinuated that reversed polarity is the worst thing since cancer and demanded that the owner concede a free, professional house-cleaning prior to our arrival. Thanks, reverse polarity, whatever you are. You were money in the bank.

The new joint has some rather more serious issues. For instance, the electrical system exudes the desperate, improvised quality of a Cuban watercraft. The home inspector opened the junction box and immediately assumed the facial expression of a bomb squad specialist who's just discovered two tons of C4 wired under the School for Kids and Puppies. He used words like "woefully inadequate" and "fire hazard"—music to my ears.

Then he jumped up and down on the deck and pronounced it unsafe.

The furnace was no great shakes, either. First of all, it looks old enough to have heated the Garden of Eden. Second, it sports fanciful scorch marks on the front panel, the paint blistered and black. Now, I'm no heating expert, but I'm pretty sure that fire is supposed to stay inside the furnace, not go wandering around your basement. "Furnace at end of its useful service life," noted the home inspector, while I noted my actual transaction price dropping like the interior temperature in my new abode come wintertime.

There was more. When the new first-floor bathroom was installed, the plumber made room for the toilet pipe by essentially cutting out everything underneath. That wouldn't be so bad if one of those things hadn't been a main floor joist. I expect this knowledge will add an extra element of danger and excitement to first-floor toilet use.

Of course, these are the major problems. Like any good home inspector, my guy also pointed out several hundred flaws that could accurately be described as insignificant. For example, he cited the garden hose for not having an "anti-siphon valve." I asked why that was a problem, and he said, "Well, if the fire department was using a hydrant nearby and you were simultaneously running a lot of water in the house, you could create a negative pressure situation where the hose would actually pull water in, if it were sitting in a puddle. And that would pollute your drinking water." So, if the house next door is on fire, and I'm simultaneously doing laundry and taking a bath and it's been raining outside, there's an off chance I might drink a small percentage of puddle water? The nerve of these people! I can't believe they'd even try to sell me a house that's so plainly defective and vulnerable to such a realistic and deadly scenario. But since they are, they should at least knock a couple hundred bucks off.

When it was all over, the inspector's report was about 80 pages long and annotated with digital photos that featured red arrows pointing to the problem areas. There were a lot of red arrows. On the positive side, when the inspector walked out on the upstairs deck, he declared, "Wow. This is the best view off a deck I've seen so far this year." Then he jumped up and down on the deck and pronounced it unsafe and in need of an extra support post. I expect I'll get right on that. As soon as I fix the polarity. ✖✖✖

PUTTIN' ON THE STYLE

How to dress like a gentleman

"I SEE BY YOUR OUTFIT that you are a cowboy." That's from the great song "The Streets of Laredo." These days you can't tell who's a banker, a lawyer, an athlete or a businessperson of any stripe. I have one son who sometimes dresses like a roadie for the Grateful Dead. His own son, almost 4, is often dressed as an engineer on a train, a comic book hero, Joey of the Ramones or Manny Ramirez. "I'm Manny Ramirez," he'll say in his Red Sox T-shirt.

"You look just like him," I'll say. And he believes it. I'm prejudiced, but I think he has style.

You may think the writer Tom Wolfe has style. He always dresses, it seems, in white suits. This has created a brand, setting him apart from other authors. Now, I think it's too studied, even pretentious. I believe that periodically we have to reinvent ourselves. Change or die.

A friend called me recently, a man who believes he maintains high standards in dress. He called to rail against lapses in taste, poor use of language, and how much we parallel the decline and the fall of the Roman Empire. His longtime nickname has been Captain Money. He was tall and generously proportioned, hefty, when I first met him. He had inherited great wealth from what, he said offhandedly, were "the important places. You know, iron ore, paper, shipping—a lot of the good old stuff." His voice boomed at you, as if he were always summoning a butler from another room. Checks came to him from various trust departments and law firms around America. You could not dislike Captain Money even though he was always flying off to New Zealand to fly fish, or to Cypress Point to play golf, or to Paris for a dinner party on someone's houseboat on the Seine. He had a self-deprecating sense of humor, knowing that he was probably the last of a dying breed. His trust departments and law firms would be serving the next privileged generation who not only didn't have their suits made... they didn't wear suits. Or opera pumps. Or ascots. But they would play the same games, tear down old mansions, build new ones.

I met big, jolly Captain Money years ago in a hotel bar in London. He looked like a British gentleman, dressed like one, talked like one.

His son, almost 4, is often dressed as a train engineer, a comic book hero, Joey Ramone or Manny Ramirez.

"It's all over for us, I know," he said, meaning his class of person. "Extinct, like the dodo. Look at this." He handed me a telegram. It was from Henry Maxwell, his shoemaker. "It was at my hotel when I arrived from New York. I had an appointment that afternoon for a fitting." It read, "Your boot maker prefers to see you a day later. Feet may not be normal on the day of your flight and therefore measurements erroneous." Captain Money smiled. Over time he has defined a gentleman with style according to his own prejudices. The prejudices of a charming snob can be as interesting or as dangerous as the prejudices of anyone else.

Here are his top 10 indicators of an old-school gentleman:

- A gentleman stirs his drink with his finger.
- If buttons appear on a gentleman's sleeves, they must always be accompanied by real buttonholes.
- A gentleman wears boxer shorts.
- It is never so warm that a gentleman should wear a short-sleeved dress shirt.
- An ordinary person grinds his cigarette out with his heel; a gentleman always with his toe.
- A gentleman never wears ready-made bow ties; he always ties his own.
- A gentleman never wears loafers to work. When he does wear loafers, he never wears socks.
- Formal clothes are never referred to as a tuxedo. "Dinner jacket" is the customary nomenclature.
- A gentleman must know his way around a golf course, a tennis court and, especially, a sailboat.
- A gentleman should have a grandmother who lives in one of the following places: Southampton, Long Island; Montecito, California; Northeast Harbor, Maine; Charlevoix, Michigan; or Upperville, Virginia.

If you look around Boston, you can see remnants of this world. It makes me wonder if we actually miss anything from the era when Captain Money could say at any bar, "Gibson. Très sec."

I'd say that what we miss is one of my favorite phrases, "Contrast is everything." Dress down; wear jeans, a T-shirt and flip-flops. But be inconsistent—also dress up. Have one good suit, one good blazer and several really good pima cotton shirts. If you're a woman, pair the little black skirt with an unusual pin, the kind that makes people ask, "Where'd you get that?" A couple of scarves as well, maybe a pashmina shawl. The idea is to keep people off balance—bosses, coworkers, people who judge us. Dress as if no one can ever put you in one box or another. If people can't figure you out, it will be a plus for your career. ***

ON BIG PAPI, BIG GAME JAMES, BULLPENS AND BLOWOUTS

5 UPS AND DOWNS

Up: As a Celtics fan, losing James Posey hurts, but as a Celtics fan, how can you be anything less than ecstatic for the guy? For those who felt he should've shown the C's a little more loyalty, we say that shiny Larry O'Brien trophy should just about cover his tab. Posey earned the right to make as much money as possible, and he deserves every cent that the Hornets are willing to overpay him.

Down: It was bound to happen at some point, and now that Jacoby Ellsbury is firmly entrenched in his first major slump, the only question is how long it will take him to break out. Hitting the rookie wall seems like a possibility, but we're keeping the faith and taking solace in the fact that whatever Jacoby's doing, he'll look damn good doing it... wait, no. We didn't mean... OK, this is a little awkward. Let's move on.

Up: When David Ortiz went on the DL on June 1, the Sox were one game behind the Rays. On the eve of his return, they were... still one game back. OK, now where were we? With Papi back in the fold, and the Rays ready to implode, it's time for the Sox to reclaim their spot on top, except for...

Down: When Ortiz went on the DL on June 1, the Yankees were 6.5 games back. And on July 25, they were... three games back. Yup, it's that time of year again. Expect to see Boston.com's first (of 10,000) "How worried are you?" poll any day.

Up: Sometimes you just get a feeling a guy's going to be a star, and it seems like almost everyone has that feeling about Pats rookie linebacker Jerod Mayo. On that note, we can't overstate the importance of signing before the start of camp. But in the end, will his success outweigh the pain of having to endure a never-ending string of bad Mayo puns?

2 PATS POINTS TO PONDER

18-1 isn't always a bad thing... Maybe this is crazy, but do you find yourself rooting for the Patriots to lose a game early this season? Wouldn't the world be a better place if every team had a loss by Week 4 and Mercury Morris was forced to spend his winter selling coke and promoting hair plugs again as opposed to cashing in on nonstop TV appearances?

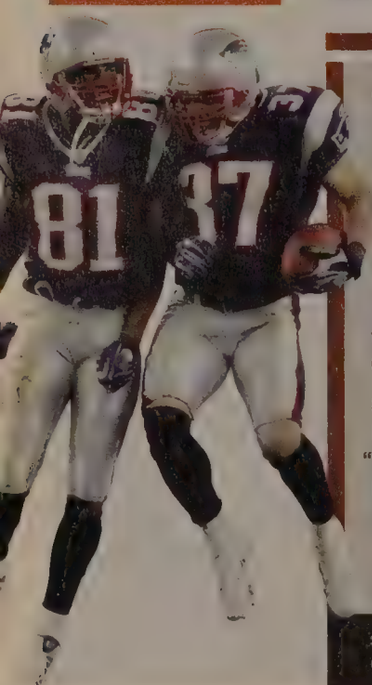
Damn, that's offensive... There are plenty of questions on defense, but aside from Donte Stallworth, the Patriots' record-setting offense remains intact. They'll still score in the 30s. They'll still have an unhealthy advantage against most other D's. So how does Belichick play it? Will we see Brady leading drives with the Pats up 35-6 in the fourth quarter, or is the vendetta settled? Not complaining. Just wondering.

3 Shortstop Scenarios

The Ideal Scenario: Jed Lowrie continues to play a solid shortstop and chips in with the bat on a few choice occasions. Management says, "You know what? He's not an impact player, but he's not going to lose us any games. Let's stick with the kid and sacrifice a little bit of pop in exchange for more consistency."

The Likely Scenario: Lowrie continues to play solid shortstop and management says, "OK, the kid looks pretty good, but look at how much money we're paying poor Julio Lugo. Let's trot him out there again and see if he can't turn things around. Hey, we won a World Series with him last year, and he couldn't be any worse."

The Wild Card Scenario: Lowrie completely fizzles and Lugo re-aggravates his injury, leaving the Red Sox no choice but to finally heed our advice and activate Johnny Pesky.



4 DATES TO WATCH

7/31 Today's the MLB Trade Deadline—the Red Sox' last chance to upgrade their depleted bullpen (except for the waivers period that runs until September... and the September roster expansion... and the two starters that will move to the bullpen once the playoffs start). But really, last chance!

8/3 It's Tom Brady's 31st birthday, and though he'll always be 24 to us, here's a semi-disturbing reality check: Assuming Kellen Clemens wins the Jets job, Brady and Peyton Manning will be the two oldest starting QBs in the AFC. There's only one other guy even in his 30s.

8/7 Time to start repressing those memories! The Pats take the field in Foxborough tonight for the preseason opener against the Ravens. By "Pats" we mean mostly random guys in Patriots uniforms with numbers like 113 and Q, but still, it's the NFL, and it's back.

8/8 The Sox kick off a 13-day, 13-game stretch against the White Sox, Rangers, Blue Jays and Orioles. Note: Given Tampa's recent success, the team from Toronto now asks that you refer to them as the Jays.

SEND FEEDBACK TO RICH@IMPROPER.COM AND READ MORE FROM RICH AT COMCASTSPORTSNET.COM.

ONE RANDOM RED SOX TIDBIT

Derek Lowe became a starter for the Sox in 2002 and over the next three seasons won 52 games. During that same span, Pedro won "only" 50. Add to that his postseason heroics and years as a dominant closer, and you could make a solid argument that Lowe (behind Roger Clemens and Pedro) is the third-best Sox pitcher of the last 20 years.

Soroff On ALICIA SACRAMONE

The Olympic hopeful talks about workouts, Chinese food and going for the gold.

Olympic gymnast Alicia Sacramone, 20, was born and raised in Winchester, Mass. After graduating from Winchester High, Sacramone went to Brown University but took this past semester off to train for the Beijing games. She began gymnastics at age 8 and entered the top tier of international competition in 2004, taking gold at the World Cup Finals. Since then, she has won numerous titles and awards—including captaining the U.S. team to victory over China at the 2007 World Championships—and has emerged as a specialist in the floor and vault competitions. She went pro in 2007 (forgoing NCAA eligibility) and hopes to work with Brown's team following the Olympics. Recently named a CoverGirl, Sacramone lives with her family in Winchester.

Jonathan Soroff: Were you a hyperactive child?

Alicia Sacramone: Definitely. But I think I tried every other sport before I came to gymnastics, and I was horrible at all of them. Then one day I was doing cartwheels in a mall, and my mom was like, "OK, that's enough of you. You're being put in gymnastics."

Describe your typical day.
Well, since we're training for the Olympics, I get up around 7:30, 8. I have practice from 9 to 12 and then I do sports med for 45 minutes or so. Then I go home and grab something to eat, go back to the gym around 4, practice until 8:30, and then I come home.

Do you get to eat anything you want?
No. We try to eat healthy because we are in leotards and there's not much coverage. We're not on a strict diet or anything, but we try to eat well.

How do you balance the demands of an Ivy League education and being an elite athlete?
Well, it takes a lot of coffee. And naps whenever I can. But gymnastics has taught me a lot of things, time management being one of them, so it's definitely helped me.

Best cocktail party trick you can do?
I've done a back-flip in a dress at a wedding. That's pretty much a go-to.

Isn't what you do kinda scary?
Yeah. [Laughs.] It's wicked scary, but it gets to a point where you've done the skill so many times it's almost automatic. But if you ever sit back and think about it, you go, "Wow. That's not safe."

Do you think of yourself as fearless?
I've never really thought about it. I do have certain fears, though. Like going into the Olympics, there's going to be so much pressure. We have such high expectations.

How does it feel knowing that the whole world is going to be watching you?
That doesn't bother me. I just don't want to disappoint those closest to me, like the coaches, my parents, my family, my friends, the team.

If you got the gold, what would you do with it?
I think I'd wear it everywhere, but my Dad has a display of all our accomplishments at his office, and I'd probably hang it there until I moved out.

Who's your toughest competition?
I think China will give us a run for our money. Within the team, we all compete against each other.

Would you be disappointed with silver or bronze?
Honestly, yes, because we're the reigning world champions and have such high expectations. But after all is said and done, I think we'll still be pleased with medaling because it is the Olympic games.

Any feelings about Tibet?
We try not to focus too much on it. We're here to do our job and concentrating on our dream of going to the Olympics. We try to filter out any negativity around that.

Do you like Chinese food?
I do, but I hear it's not the same over there. My coach went and said, "They gave me this meat and didn't tell me what it was, and it turned out it was dog." Eeeeew.

Are you bringing any good-luck charms?
My cross that I always keep with me and some little good-luck jewelry that my Mom gave me.

Thing you're most nervous about?
Getting jet lag. I'm not a good sleeper, and I'm really hoping that it doesn't kill me.

Any tourist things you want to do?
I've been told that we won't have much time for tourism, but I'd really like to see the Great Wall.

Name one body part you can bend that I can't.
I have really long arms, and I can scratch anywhere on my own back.

Nadia Comaneci or Mary Lou Retton?
Dominique Moceanu is closer to my generation. She was one of my big idols growing up.

Ever wanted to kill your coach?
On a daily basis. We're actually so similar, we fight and bash heads over the stupidest stuff, and then the next day it's fine.

Ever picture yourself on a Wheaties box?
No. I haven't, actually.

Oh, c'mon! You're an Olympic gymnast!
Well, I'll wait until I actually see it and then say, "There you go." I'll go to the supermarket and stand in the cereal aisle and just point.

Worst part of having to wear a leotard?
They're pretty tight and sometimes they dye your armpits the color of the leotard.

How do you prepare mentally for a competition?
I try not to think about it at all. I just relax and listen to my iPod and get myself psyched up.

Favorite song to compete to?
"Sexy Back" by Justin Timberlake.

Body part that hurts the most after competing?
I think my ankles. Pretty much from my knees down. We stand in a trash bin filled with water and ice. It's actually my favorite part of practice.

Are you ready for the entire world to know who you are?
Not quite yet, but in a couple of weeks, once I'm finished training, I think I'll be good.

Last question: If you win the gold, what's the very first thing you'll do?
I think we'll have to pop a bottle of champagne. That definitely deserves a celebration! ✖✖✖

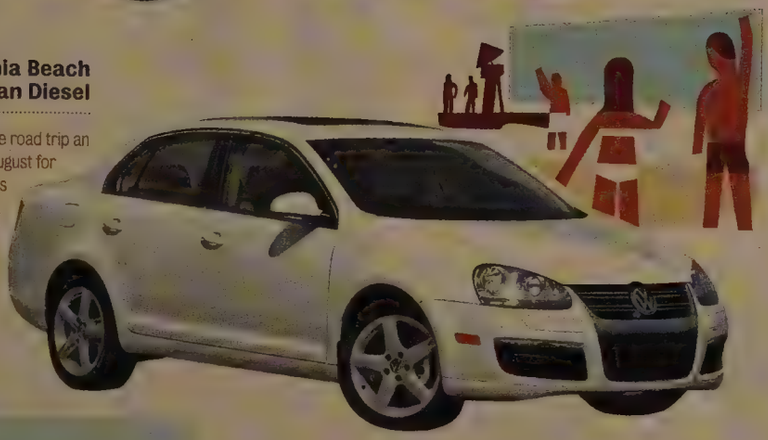
BEACHY KEEN

How to do four seaside activities without totally killing the environment.

By Ezra Dyer Illustrations by Derek Aylward

Activity: Schlepping Toys to the Shore
Car: Honda Ridgeline

For years, everyone made fun of Honda because they don't make a V-8 engine. The Ford F-150s and Chevy Silverados of the world gave the Honda Ridgeline a wedgie and took its lunch money because it only has a V-6. Well, to torture this metaphor a little more, $4 gas has made the Ridgeline the geek who sold his tech company and dates models. Costing about $28,000, the Ridgeline is ugly, sure, but it gets 20 miles per gallon, seats five people and has a lockable trunk under the pickup bed. And it's an established fact that any truck looks 20 percent cooler with a surfboard in the back.



Activity: Driving to a Beach—Virginia Beach
Car: Volkswagen Jetta TDI Clean Diesel

Recent newspaper stories have breathlessly declared the road trip an anthropological relic of the cheap-gas era. Well, starting this August for 22 grand or so, you can have a German sedan that gets 44 miles per gallon on the highway (according to VW's third-party testing). The Jetta TDI also has 140 horsepower and a ton o' torque out of its little diesel motor. So go ahead and take that road trip—at 44 miles per gallon, Virginia Beach is only 13 gallons away.

Activity: Using Your Nantucket Oversand Vehicle Permit
Car: Mercedes GL320 CDI

You have a problem: You're rich and you want to drive an SUV that suitably declares it to the world, yet you also want to appear environmentally sensitive. Well, Mercedes is here for you, my friend. The GL320 CDI has the look of an obnoxious gas-guzzler (it costs about $54,275), yet its diesel V-6 returns 24 miles per gallon in the city, which is something you can announce indignantly if anyone gives you the hairy eyeball at the Friends of the Piping Plover benefit party parking lot.

Activity: Taking a Short Bus to Get to the Beach Car: Chevy Tahoe Hybrid

Look, we know that leviathan SUVs are suddenly about as fashionable and PC as trans-fat–fried seal-pup fillets. However, sometimes you need to haul a lot of people and a lot of stuff and maybe a damn boat, and in that case, the Prius isn't gonna cut it. Starting at around $50,490, the Tahoe Hybrid isn't the miracle vehicle that will wean us from foreign oil, but its dual-mode hybrid system allows it to manage about 21 miles per gallon in the city. And it'll seat eight and tow 6,000 pounds. Plus you get a hybrid tax credit for buying it, which is both hilarious and gives you more money to spend on PBRs at the Beachcomber.

SURF vs. TURF

A RACE TO THE CAPE BY FERRY AND CAR

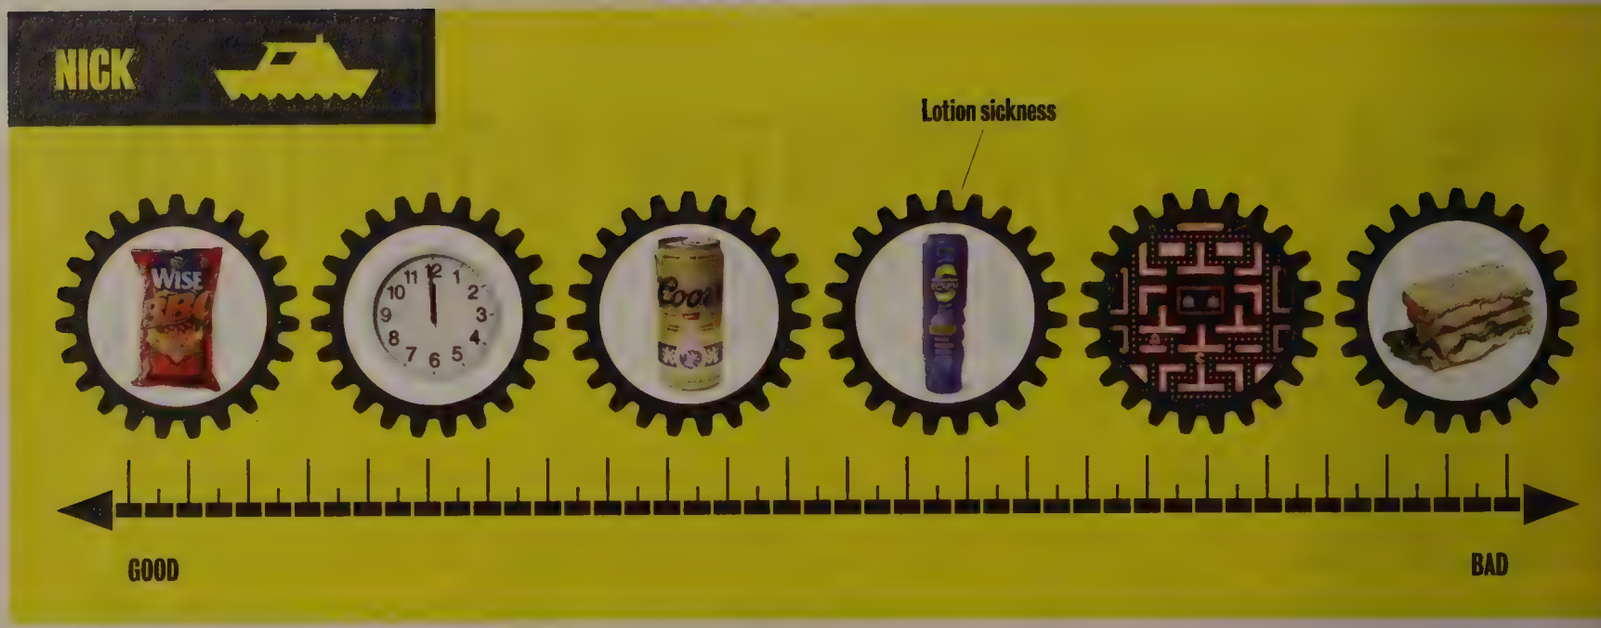
Nick Altschuller and Ezra Dyer

IT'S A FUNDAMENTAL CONDITION OF SUMMER IN BOSTON: YOU WANT TO GO TO THE CAPE, BUT GETTING THERE IS PAINFUL. INEXTRICABLY INTERTWINED WITH THE HAPPY IMAGES OF SANDY DUNES AND ICY BREWS ARE THE ACCOMPANYING EXPECTATIONS OF CHOKING GRIDLOCK ON ROUTES 93, 3 AND 6, AND PROBABLY EVEN THE DIRT ROAD AND DRIVEWAY OF WHATEVER COTTAGE, CLAM SHACK OR GATED RICH-O COMMUNITY YOU'RE ULTIMATELY HEADED TO. IF ONLY THERE WERE A BETTER WAY. WELL, THERE MIGHT BE. POSSIBLY.

THE HIGH-SPEED FERRY FROM BOSTON TO PROVINCETOWN TAKES ONLY 90 MINUTES, SO WE DECIDED TO CONDUCT AN EXPERIMENT TO DECIDE IF YOU REALLY NEED TO DRIVE TO THE CAPE AFTER ALL. IF YOU'RE AN ARTIST, OR GAY, OR A CREWMAN ON THE DOWNEASTER "ALEXA," THAT QUESTION IS SELF-EXPLANATORY BECAUSE YOU'RE JUST GOING TO P-TOWN ANYWAY. BUT WHAT IF YOU'RE BOUND FOR MORE DISTANT REACHES OF THE CAPE, SOMEWHERE FARTHER DOWN ON THE ARM? CAN YOU GET THERE WITHOUT A CAR? WE DISPATCHED NICK ALTSCHULLER TO RIDE THE FERRY AND THEN ATTEMPT TO FIND HIS WAY TO THE BEACHCOMBER IN WELLFLEET, VIA THE CAPE FLEX BUS, TAXI, RICKSHAW, RAZOR SCOOTER OR ANY OTHER MEANS NECESSARY. MEANWHILE, EZRA DYER DEPARTED BOSTON SIMULTANEOUSLY IN AN INFINITI FX35 CROSSOVER.

WHO SPENT MORE MONEY? WHO WAS MORE STRESSED OUT? IS IT EVEN POSSIBLE TO GET TO THE BEACHCOMBER WITHOUT A CAR? WITH THE STATE OF GAS PRICES AND TERMINAL TRAFFIC, IS THE PUBLIC-TRANSPORT ROUTE MORE THAN JUST AN INTRIGUING ALTERNATIVE FOR DAY-TRIPPERS AND THE PROVINCETOWN-BOUND? GENTLEMEN, START YOUR ENGINES.



NICK BY SEA

I'm a bit jealous of Ezra as my 1 pm ferry chortles away from the dock. Not that I was given the choice, but I would have taken "toy around with a $41,000 luxury automobile" over "kill time in a shell of corroding steel."

I enjoy driving and have never really liked ferries. It's like flying with anticipated turbulence. Inside it's boring, claustrophobic, and you feel guilty for not "taking advantage" of the outdoors. On the deck, it's windy, reeks of diesel, and you end up salt-glazed and burnt like a beach-stand pretzel. But I have a bag full of quarters and a plan to pass the time. While Ezra "White as Bleached Snow" Dyer listens to old-school hip-hop on XM for the next few hours, I'll be geeking out even harder spending the next 90 minutes assuring my initials make it to the top of the Ms. Pac-Man machine. Every ferry I've ever been on has Ms. Pac-Man.

Until now. Great, now I have to read. Whoopee.

There are definite perks to ferries, the immediate legality of road sodas being the biggest. Then there's the exchange of Cape traffic for miles of blue nothing. It's not an entertaining visual, but it beats playing "guess the DVD" on the minivan in front of you.

Then there's the cost. Reserved online, a one-way ticket to Provincetown from Seaport Boulevard runs $49. Add to that a bag of barbecue chips ($1.50) and a Coors Original ($5, with bonus points for actually having the Banquet Beer), and the grand total is $55.50.

When driving, my share of gas, tallied with my usual convenience store cornucopia of Slim Jims, granola bars and Dr Pepper, comes out to around $35. That's cheaper, sure, but consider the opportunity cost—aka the only concept I retained from clawing my way through macroeconomics. If you asked me if I wanted to save a couple of hours at the cost of $20, would I take it? No, because I'm cheap. But if posed with the same question while gridlocked 135 feet up on the Sagamore Bridge, would I jump at the chance? You betcha. Because I could already be at the bar, signing up for drag-queen karaoke at the Governor Bradford Motel. Would you rather be drunk, watching an old man in a gown singing "Copacabana," or sober, locked in an SUV and smelling jerky burps? Exactly.

I do catch a whiff of something terrible, however. One of those personally hated odors that cause my limbic system to shrivel like a shrinky dink—someone else's tuna sandwich. There's not a whole lot of privacy on a ferry. Driving allows you to be yourself. Ferrying forces you to politely ignore elderly tourists and their tuna, three words I enjoy as much as "turn," "head" and "cough." But seeing as how it's early afternoon on a Monday, there aren't a whole lot of people around, so I stretch out and take a nap. This is something I would never be able to do in a car, unless I was a selfish roadtrip partner or a driver who felt like testing the airbags. It's not the most comfortable resting place. Either to counter the tips and rolls, or because the Provincetown III is capable of ludicrous speed, the ferry has chairs shaped like racing seats, so I spend 45 minutes with twin ridges buried in my thorax.

Napped and hungry, I waltz over to the snack bar. The selection—including pre-packaged bran muffins and a rolling rack of defeated hot dogs—leaves much to be desired. As does the service, consisting of a dozing young man I rouse with a cough. With more than half the cabin rocking and sleeping like babies on barbiturates, I hold no ill will. Besides, this guy can provide me with beer and must be treated with the proper respect.

Of course, any discussion of beer leads to a discussion of the bathroom situation. We're not talking luxury commodes here, but with calm seas, these restrooms would make any Mobil Mart proud. On choppy waters, however, you could have the beginnings of an R. Kelly video. Not being a sanitation stickler, I don't care either way, but the bathrooms are coed, and I could see a woman of more discerning standards putting a cork in it until reaching port, unless she'd been to the public toilet on Provincetown wharf before. The smell there could crack a sinus.

Coming into dock at a cool 110 minutes, I'm way ahead of Ezra. All I have to do is hop the Flex bus to Wellfleet and I'll crush him in our race to the Comber. The only problem is, the ferry is scheduled to come in at 2:30 pm and the buses leave every hour on the half hour. This fiendish plot, no doubt funded by the deep pockets of the salt-water-taffy lobby, leaves me with a little time on my hands. So I stock up on beach plum candy and call Ezra for a ride. I head to the Old Colony Tap for some Narragansetts, ready for the soothing sounds of Ice Cube to bring me home.

EZRA BY LAND

Nick calls to tell me that the ferry is shoving off, so I drop the FX into drive and pull away from my building in Southie. It's 1 pm. Now, if I were a true masochist I'd want to conduct this little game at 5:30 on a Friday evening, but in the name of expedience and my own sanity, I'm hitting the road at an off-peak hour. However long it takes me to get to the Cape, add an extra two hours to arrive at the true weekend-crush number.

I have in my possession what I consider the ideal vehicle for the Cape-bound traveler. The 2009 Infiniti FX is an SUV, so it has room for friends and their beach chairs, boogey boards, coolers and other detritus necessary for a weekend of relaxation. More important, it's both comfortable and loaded to the gills with electronic helpers designed to relieve the mental burden of the plodding, spirit-killing traffic that you always encounter at the Route 6 funnel, where the road goes to two lanes and your blood-pressure dial goes to 11.

I have air-conditioned seats to battle the dreaded summer malady known as swamp ass. I have CD, AM, FM, iPod and XM entertainment. I have a gizmo called "Distance Control Assist" that keeps an electronic eye on the car ahead of me, hits the brakes if I get too close and shoves the gas pedal upward if I don't take the hint. The electronic cruise control will follow the car in front, braking to a stop and then accelerating back up to speed. There's even a system that reads the stripes of the lanes and, if you drift out of yours, the car drags the brakes on the opposite side to pull you back on track. The cliché "It practically drives itself" is pretty close to literal with the Infiniti FX35.

As I pull onto I-93, there's a billboard for the Provincetown ferry that reads, "This route to the Cape isn't on your GPS." In fact, ferry billboard, I happen to own a Garmin 176 loaded with MapSource BlueChart ocean charts for the Northeast, so that route actually is on my GPS. Of course, that information is kind of worthless without a boat. But still, someone should tell that ferry copywriter that when you assume, you make an ass of u and me. Ferries are so smug.

As I reach Route 3, traffic is moving briskly, which I know from experience is a fantasy at any given rush hour, never mind Friday in the summer. About 45 minutes in, I'm already down around Plymouth. And I already have to take a leak.

Feeling my back teeth begin to float, I pull off at a random exit and make a beeline for the nearest Dunkin' Donuts and the promise of a bathroom. Situation addressed, I order an iced coffee to refill my bladder. With one chamber of the FX's double-barreled cupholder still lacking ammo, I drive across the street to Burger King for some greasy grub and another bevvie. I order a cheeseburger, a small fry and a Coke—wait, make that a Diet Coke. I pull around and the cashier, noting that I possibly weigh a couple of bills less than the average client around this region, declares, "Aw, you ain't on a diet!" Flattery will get you everywhere, my lovely Burger Queen. Taking a pull off my waxy-tasting Diet Coke, I wonder if Nick is ordering a beer right now at the ferry bar, and I feel a palpable pang of envy.

Back on the road, I glance at the clock and realize that, barring a rude encounter with an iceberg or pirates, Nick is going to reach Provincetown while I'm still barely over the bridge. No matter. He still has to find his way out of P-town. Meanwhile, I'm thoroughly enjoying the solitude of my empty car. I burp my way through "Jessie's Girl," an endeavor that likely would've drawn scorn on the public boat. Likewise, I have a top-volume sing-along with Rick Ross' "I'm the Biggest Boss That You've Seen Thus Far" (a great use of the phrase "thus far" in a rap chorus, by the way). This is something that wouldn't have been possible on the ferry at all, unless I had a suitably large boom-box.

But now that I'm on the Cape proper, my driving luck is running out. It's the middle of the afternoon on a weekday, and Route 6 is still so jammed up that a cop has to periodically stop traffic just so people can get out of an adjacent Tedeschi's convenience store. Signs warn of "High Enforcement Areas," so I set the cruise control and let the FX lock on the car in front of me. The only problem with this strategy is that I fall behind when traffic moves faster than the cruise-control speed, so I mitigate that problem by simply setting the cruise control on 90 miles per hour. That way I always keep up, and all I've got to do is steer. It's a pretty peachy approach until the car in front of me turns off and leaves the road ahead wide-open, and the Infiniti begins accelerating—and accelerating. It takes a moment before I realize that it's not stopping until it hits 90. I hit the brakes and resolve to rely on Distance Control Assist from here on out.

Nick calls. He's landed. I'm still about 35 miles from P-town and not moving quickly. I tell him to try his luck with the bus and call me again with an update. Did I just pass the turn for the Beachcomber? I always miss it.

Speaking of missing it, Nick misses the bus, a fact I realize when I reach Truro and he still hasn't called. And, to round out the buffoonery, I miss the turn for Provincetown and have to pull over to rassle with the Infiniti's navi system, which is unaware that there is a ferry in Provincetown and is trying to direct me back to the ferry terminal in Plymouth. I kind of thought Route 6 just went right to Provincetown. That is not the case.

It takes me a total of two and a half hours to reach Provincetown, and that's under close to ideal circumstances. Meanwhile, it took Nick about an hour and a half, and, if he'd caught his bus, he could've handily beaten me to the Beachcomber (or at least, the vicinity—the bus stop is about a mile from the beach). However, he didn't catch his bus. That's the problem with public transportation: You're at the mercy of other people's schedules, and those schedules have a way of screwing you over.

On the money front, I covered 115 miles and the FX managed 25 miles per gallon, so I used 4.6 gallons of gas. At about $4.30 per gallon, it cost me $19.78 to get to Provincetown, which makes it seem as if I easily beat the $49 price of Nick's ticket. However, gas isn't your only expense when you own a car. According to Edmunds.com, when you consider the cost of depreciation, financing, insurance, taxes and maintenance, the owner of a new FX35 will pay $1.02 per mile in the first year, making my trip a whopping $117.30 proposition. Given that cost schism, Nick probably could've taken a taxi to the Beachcomber and still ended up spending a similar amount of money.

But I'd still vote for the car as the transport of choice for hitting the Cape. It's more expensive; it's more stressful; and, depending on your destination and the day of the week, it probably takes longer. There's the risk of tickets and accidents. But the car gives you freedom. Freedom to show up when you want and leave when you're ready. Freedom to explore that beach down the way. Freedom to sing along to the radio and stop at Panera Bread. If you're going to Provincetown or maybe Truro, take the boat. Otherwise, stick with the imperfect automobile. Because when you think about it, part of the satisfaction of arriving at the Cape stems from the trauma of getting there. In the immortal words of the Marquis de Sade, "It is always by way of pain one arrives at pleasure." ×××

THE GEEK SHALL INHERIT (MIDDLE) EARTH

A QUEST FOR WESTWOOD'S ONLINE FANTASY EMPIRE

BY ANDREW RIMAS PHOTOGRAPHS BY TODD DIONNE

THERE ARE STRETCHES OF ROUTE 1 where New England sinks under the plastic veil that blankets highways from Mansfield to Mumbai. Doughnut dealers and auto shops bunch up against the whirring blacktop, while farther back, screened by a few weak elms and odd little blocks of lawn (rectangles, hooks and rhomboids), lies the anonymous world of the office park.

The first parking lot on the left of Westwood's Glacier Drive blends in well with the suburban blur. It wraps around the offices of a centrifuge manufacturer and a software firm called Turbine Inc. Then you notice the bumper stickers. Pasted to the backs of a new model pickup here, an aging Civic there, you see familiar lettered ovals. But instead of ACK or IRE, the stickers read MRDR.

Mordor. A name beloved by every child with an above-average reading level and a conviction that reality is a whopping disappointment. In JRR Tolkien's fantasy novel The Lord of the Rings, and in Peter Jackson's films from the book, Mordor is a poisonous wasteland full of monsters and volcanoes. Not a whole lot like Westwood. So it's unusual to flaunt it on your car like a Martha's Vineyard decal. The people who work at Turbine, however, are unusual in that they make computer games, including a very popular one called Lord of the Rings Online (LOTRO).

"We create fun," says Jim Crowley, Turbine's CEO. He's a hale and chipper man in the executive stamp—all handshakes and competence. Turbine's been around since 1994, but a few years ago it went from being a small "body shop" doing contract work for bigger game companies into a major contender in the MMO (massive multiplayer online) games market—estimated to be worth well above $1 billion in this country alone—and mushrooming.

"We're an entertainment-as-service company," says Crowley, meaning he's not selling widgets. People pay a subscription to play MMO games, so they're billed monthly, like cable TV. That's what makes the game so lucrative.

The first thing that a visitor notices when entering the Turbine offices is the life-size model of a Nazgûl—one of Tolkien's scary ringwraiths—lurking next to the reception desk. The next thing you notice is the darkness. The cubicles sit in a perpetual murk, their monitors gleaming like jellyfish. There are no windows, and the level of chatter is practically Trappist for an office of nearly 300 people. Eyeballs are fixed on screens.

A few years ago, Turbine emerged through a tortuous thicket of legal documents, company mergers and blind chance with rights to the two most recognizable names in fantasy pop culture: Dungeons & Dragons and Tolkien's The Lord of the Rings. The company used these as settings for MMORPGs (massive multiplayer online role-playing games), in which subscribers can create alter egos, say as elves or warriors, and meet their friends in a digital world animated in the finest pixels money can buy. Instead of going out for a beer with your buddy Dave, you can win martial glory, or play lutes, or buy virtual real estate. When it launched last year, Lord of the Rings Online won a trove of industry accolades (including a 2007 PC Game of the Year award). Turbine won't reveal its revenues, but at least one analyst thinks it has about a million paying subscribers for its products. LOTRO's success has turned Turbine into a very fat fish in a pond that's overflowing its banks.

INSTEAD OF GOING OUT FOR A BEER WITH YOUR BUDDY DAVE, YOU CAN WIN MARTIAL GLORY, OR PLAY LUTES.

"Massachusetts is the fifth or sixth largest state in the U.S. in terms of game development," says Michael Goodman, a gaming industry analyst at research and consulting firm Yankee Group. It's getting bigger. Red Sox pitcher Curt Schilling is about to throw his glove into the MMO ring with his Maynard-based 38 Studios (he's vocal about his fondness for World of Warcraft, so everyone expects his company to take a stab at the crowded fantasy genre). In Cambridge, Harmonix Music Systems dominates the world's music game market with its hugely popular Guitar Hero and Rock Band series. Up the road, Conduit Labs is trying to meld online gaming with social networking. In Quincy, 2K Boston is the local office of 2K Games, the publisher of last year's hit dystopian adventure BioShock. Foxboro's Play Hard Sports Inc. is a newcomer, founded this year by former Turbine CEO Jeffrey Anderson—the man who helmed the release of Lord of the Rings Online last year. Now he's trying to bring online sports games to a mass audience. Turbine, meanwhile, is flush with $40 million of fresh investment money that it's using to hire programmers and artists by the hundred. "It's logical that Boston's emerged as a beacon in this industry," Crowley says. "The level of engineering talent is extraordinary. If you're creative, there's no better place to be."

A note of disclosure: I am a colossal nerd. After the cocreator of Dungeons & Dragons died this year, I eulogized him in a mawkish editorial (see The Ottawa Citizen, 3/18/08, "A Magical Gift of Adventure"). So when Kate Paiz, the senior producer for the Dungeons & Dragons game, takes me on a tour of the Turbine office, the sight of so many people being paid to play with monsters feels somehow affirming. We peer over the shoulder of a woman who has spent an entire week mapping out the graphics for an icy cove, strewn with flotsam from a shipwreck. As we watch her fiddle with the exact placement of a boulder, a dragon flaps coolly across the virtual sky.

"They get to work for their hobby," says Paiz. The designers do, indeed, look blissful, but that may be the lighting. We walk through a field of artists' cubicles hung with anatomical models and stacked with books of armor. On one monitor, a designer crafts the inner curves of a dwarf's ear. In a particularly dim section of the building, banks of screens shine on the rapt faces of play-testers. These are professional gamers who make a living out of quality control, running their avatars around the landscape for countless hours in hopes of finding a clumsy pixel or a blip in the game experience. It's hard to tell in the darkness, but they don't look like they get much sunlight. Farther on, a cluster of young story developers exudes a chess club vibe.

According to Adam Mersky, Turbine's director of communications, a third of LOTRO players are over the age of 35. Very often, they're people who don't habitually play video games but who are fans of Tolkien's books. This is a sensitive bunch. The game designers know that a failure of "authenticity" would mean death by chat forum.

"We know to follow certain rules," says Jeff Steefel, the executive producer for LOTRO. "For example, there's a respect for nature in Tolkien. Even if you want to, we don't allow you to go around wantonly killing bunnies."

The game is now being rolled out in Korea, and will soon launch in Russia and China. Trying to please such different audiences is like trying to a host a dinner party for a vegan and a velociraptor. According to Steefel, Asian players are generally more competitive. They like to beat up on each other and pick fights with strangers, meaning they favor a game with a PvP (Player versus Player) aspect. Westerners enjoy lingering over dramatic story lines. They value the "sandbox" aspects of the game, exploring the environment and sniffing virtual roses. In contrast, "there are guys in Korea who finished 300 hours of game content in seven days," says Steefel. Both styles of gameplay have to be fused to exploit the global market.

MY BUTTOCKS ARE COMPLETELY INSENSATE. I REALIZE I HAVEN'T EATEN IN 12 HOURS.

"There are 20 to 30 million MMO subscribers in North America and Europe," says Jon Radoff, CEO of GamerDNA, a Web site that provides services for MMO players. "In Asia, there are 15 to 16 million." Turbine wants to expand that pool by millions more when it develops a means to deliver MMOs to video game consoles like Xbox 360 and Playstation 3, a technology that doesn't exist yet. "We think it's fundamentally flawed that MMOs can't be played on consoles," says Crowley. Should Turbine brew up the technology, it could invade tens of millions of American living rooms at a fee of about $15 per month.

"We're planning on making some announcements in [the] fall," smiles Crowley.

Of course, if the game's a feculent mess, it won't matter how many TVs it can breach. I download the software to find out. Another note of disclosure: I am a Tolkien fan. A lapsed member of the Tolkien Society. An inviolate nerd who is, if not fluent in Sindarin Elvish, then at least shameless enough to own all 12 hardcover volumes of The History of Middle Earth. In moments of cruelty or drunkenness, I read passages to my wife.

That's why I approach the game with caution. Tolkien had a suspicion of technology, of the machine, which he equated with magic. And there's nothing more magical and mechanistic than an ornate software program, the purpose of which is to mimic life. The central conflict in Tolkien's stories is caused by Artifice, meaning the selfish impulse to shape the world to reflect one's own will, instead of the will of God. Just like in Paradise Lost. And the Greek myths. And every good story going back to Eden. It's about The Fall. So there's something jarring about using Tolkien's world as the basis for an alternate reality. Also, Tolkien's work has a verdant green thread running through it—his talking trees, his industrialist bad guys, his bumpkin hobbits. It's fair to say he was an environmentalist, if not an outright Luddite. He would have despised computer games. To understand the depth of his conservatism, consider that he once threatened to give up modern English and only speak Old Mercian. That's part of his books' appeal. They're the antithesis of ironic, modernist literature; a eulogy for a green and pleasant England, a world of yeoman squires who never read Ulysses and died at Ypres.

In the game, if you progress far enough, you have the option of playing as a chicken.

These thoughts slosh around my consciousness as I click through the set-up program. Here's a record of my adventures:

1:32 pm. My avatar is a meaty, Teutonic-looking "champion." He wears a form-fitting medieval outfit and a large beard, giving him a look that I expect would make him very popular in a gay biker bar. I name him Beorhtnoth, in honor of Tolkien's 1953 alliterative poem, "The Homecoming of Beorhtnoth Beorhthelm's Son." Did I mention that I'm a colossal nerd?

1:40 pm. I haven't read the game manual and am having trouble killing things. Also, I feel underdressed because I don't have any shiny armor. Yet.

3:35 pm. I wander through a rustic idyll worthy of a Wordsworth poem: luxuriant glades and dells, wistful ruins, birdsong trilling across a summery sky. Everything's infested with killer wolves, though. ("I wandered lonely as a cloud / That floats on high o'er vales and hills / And then snarling animals ate my head.")

2:38 pm. A strange person is following me around, jumping on my head and texting, Hi, Beorhtnoth. This is my first experience with another player. I discover the game won't let me attack him, so I run away, feeling awkward for both of us.

3:01 pm. I went up a level! I feel happy, like a rat that gets a piece of cheddar instead of an electric shock.

8:50 pm. One of the other players is trying to sell Beorhtnoth an illegal upgrade, a cheat: The price is favourable. Level 1–20 cost only $18. 1–53 only $242. I've read about this. Apparently, there are sweatshops in Mexico where indentured computer geeks play MMOs for days on end, generating virtual gold and experience, which are then bought for cash by lazy American gamers. Theoretical economists find this hilarious.

11:12 pm. The stars are cast in a breathtaking array across the cloudless evening sky. I marvel at the delicate artistry of nighttime on Middle Earth, the sough of the branches and the slivers of moonlight in the birches. Someone texts me: LFF? Healer or captain needed 4 raid on barrow downs. Nearby, a hobbit picks at his wedgie. There's a disjoint somewhere in all this, but I'm too tired to think about it.

1:45 am. My eyes are gummy and my spine has hardened into an unnatural curve. My buttocks are completely insensate. I realize that I haven't eaten in 12 hours.

I shut the computer off, reflecting that, while LOTRO is an enchanting, digital version of super-crack, it's made entirely of surfaces. What the player experiences is a universe of tiny, ornate planes that compose its "reality." It has no bones. Merely an animating spirit in its software engine. There is no skeleton underneath, unlike Tolkien's books, which are ribbed with myth and language.

It's going to make millions in China.

DRIVING AMBITION

Looking at the MFA's exhibition 1950s and 1960s "Dream Car" Model-rama, it seems that, 50 years ago, Americans truly loved fins. Big fins, so they could feel like sharks when they revved up at the drive-in. The show spotlights model cars built as entries in a college scholarship competition run by General Motors from 1937 to 1968. They're 1/12-scale visions of high-tech, old-school cool, featuring bubble canopies and really wild bumpers. More than 60 models will be on display, with the builders on hand to explain their extreme visions of engineering.

Locals who lost houses in the Amory Street fire last spring hope to do just that with help from a group of New England actors who've organized a fundraiser on their behalf. The Beantown Swing Orchestra performs at the Aug. 3 event, fresh off its movie debut in Kate Hudson's flick My Best Friend's Girl. Led by Frank Hsieh, the 18-piece ensemble sets the stage for a night of dinner, dancing and entertainment.

The Chronicles of Narnia: Prince Caspian ★ What a violent and ugly militaristic slog this is! Sucking all the wonder out of CS Lewis' novel, director Andrew Adamson blew $100 million on special effects without mustering a single memorable image. Even the sunlight is pale and wan as those bratty, fairly indistinguishable Pevensie children return to their formerly enchanted fairyland to find that 1,300 years have passed and everybody's trapped in some sort of downcast Bored of the Rings with a bit of Hamlet in there, too. Ben Barnes makes Orlando Bloom seem captivating as the tedious title character who seeks vengeance and leads chintzy elfin creatures against some disturbing, racially coded baddies. There's no surprise, delight or anything resembling levity here, just one grim battle after another rendered in Adamson's hacky medium shots and close-ups. The light-skinned true-believers slaughter legions of swarthy, bearded heathens, all in preparation for the second coming of a lion (Jesus, as voiced by Liam Neeson) who doles out some even meaner divine retribution. Onward, Christian soldiers. Next stop: the Crusades, or Iran. (In the suburbs.)

Encounters at the End of the World ★★★ After 40-odd years and 50-something films, Werner Herzog has investigated almost every obscure corner of the globe, so naturally his latest masterpiece sends him all the way to Antarctica. Turning his inquisitive gaze and persnickety voice-over narration on the residents of McMurdo Station, a tacky American outpost "complete with abominations like yoga classes," Herzog salutes the vagabond spirits exploring the bottom edge of the map. The director's voracious sampling of their research conjures a thriving ecosystem. We hear seals wailing what sound like Pink Floyd solos and savor some jaw-dropping underwater photography (by frequent Herzog collaborator Henry Kaiser), before finally standing on the edge of an active volcano. The title is double-edged, as all involved take a dim view of the planet's long-term prospects. But somehow Herzog's reverence for every last sign of life feels weirdly joyous and hopeful. This movie is an astounding, eye-opening experience. (At Kendall Square and Waltham Embassy.)

Get Smart ★★ Missed it by that much. This isn't a half-bad comedy for about 40 minutes, but then the fool thing degenerates into a crummy, lugubrious action flick. A throwback not to Mel Brooks and Buck Henry's '60s TV staple, the latest misadventure of bumbling Agent 86 is more akin to lousy '80s capers like Spies Like Us, tossing aside promising comedic shenanigans in favor of bloated, overwrought chase sequences and boring pyrotechnics. Steve Carell provides a kinder, gentler take on Don Adams' undercover numbskull, playing nicely off of Anne Hathaway's too-young but competent Agent 99. Dwayne Johnson works a delightful self-deprecating goof on his former Rock persona, while the peerless Alan Arkin bats cleanup as their beleaguered boss. Sadly, director Peter Segal, who recently helmed the terrible remake of The Longest Yard, has no faith in his cast's comic prowess and throws the entire picture over to tedious shoot-outs and vehicular pandemonium. Sorry about that, chief. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Gonzo: The Life and Work of Dr. Hunter S. Thompson ★★ This disappointing hagiography comes from documentarian Alex Gibney, who honed his craft with current events flicks like last year's Oscar-winner Taxi to the Dark Side. Gibney never finds a convincing angle on the pioneering journalist's life story, leaping backwards from Thompson's 2005 suicide to his groundbreaking books before spending most of the running time on the author's indelible dispatches from the 1972 campaign trail, work that arguably changed the form of political reporting forever. The movie is packed with archival footage, most of it freely sampled from previous documentaries already familiar to Thompson aficionados. The film doesn't examine the author's self-destructive tendencies. Alcoholism, drug addiction and violent outbursts are presented as cute, often buried beneath glowing testimonials by everybody from George McGovern to Pat Buchanan. The movie makes an unconvincing case for its subject's continued relevance in his final years, conveniently ignoring that Thompson's writing had lapsed into stagnant self-parody. (At Kendall Square and Waltham Embassy.)

Hancock ★★ ½ Will Smith stars as the title character, a drunken amnesiac superhero who flies around downtown Los Angeles fighting crime while wasted and knocks over a lot of expensive stuff. Like buildings. Hancock's such a shambling wreck, he can't even take flight without leaving massive divots in the street beneath him, which in this litigious day and age naturally makes him the plaintiff in a ton of property damage suits. So far, so funny, and as director Peter Berg's pricey blockbuster is content being Bad Santa with superpowers, the movie zings. Alas, Hancock pivots on one game-changing plot-twist that makes it

NO JOKE

An epic battle unfolds in The Dark Knight.

The Dark Knight
★★★½
Starring Christian Bale, Heath Ledger, Aaron Eckhart, Gary Oldman, Maggie Gyllenhaal, Morgan Freeman and Michael Caine. Screenplay by Christopher and Jonathan Nolan. Directed by Christopher Nolan. At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.

Stephen Vaughan

AS MORE THAN ONE CHARACTER gloomily observes in Christopher Nolan's chilling sequel to Batman Begins, "You either die a hero or you live long enough to see yourself become the villain."

It's a troubling notion, but one that feels perfectly at home in this astoundingly ambitious picture. There are so many meaty ideas and depressingly timely concerns inside this fast-paced crime saga, you can't quite wrap your head around it all in just one viewing. This movie may fall shy of greatness, but that's not for lack of trying.

The Dark Knight might be the first blockbuster as dialectical exercise. The witty, literate screenplay (penned by Nolan and his brother Jonathan) mainly consists of philosophical debates among various agents of order and chaos. These chats are punctuated by the often-exhilarating spectacle of a depressed billionaire dressed up like a flying rodent, beating the crap out of a psychotic clown.

Nolan's Batman Begins nimbly rebooted the Caped Crusader's mythology by grounding comic-book flights of fancy in a semirealistic universe, as Christian Bale's beleaguered Bruce Wayne slowly learned to walk the line between justice and vengeance.

The Dark Knight one-ups the gritty realism of its predecessor by sticking with unadorned Chicago locations instead of stylized Gotham City sets and shying away from unnecessary special effects. The movie's visual lingo comes not from comic book panels but from classic crime dramas, and is full of winking homages to The French Connection, Heat and The Godfather Part II.

Picking up where the last flick's rousing final scene left off, Gary Oldman's endearing, soon-to-be Commissioner Gordon worries what sort of unexpected effect a costumed vigilante might have on the criminal ecosystem. "Escalation" is Gordon's biggest fear, and it hits Gotham City hard in the form of the Joker.

Devastatingly, this iconic character turned out to be Heath Ledger's final completed performance, and he delivers precisely the sort of roiling, balls-to-the-wall turn from which legends are made.

Just watch the way Ledger shuffles hunch-backed into scene after scene, unsteady on corkscrew legs, incessantly blinking as a serpentine tongue darts over his scarred, twisted lips. The smeared clown makeup and matted green hair eerily suit his singsong vocal cadences; he sounds like a demented ventriloquist's dummy. Ledger is all bumbling elbows until it's time to kill, which he does with swift, graceful precision.

The Joker is such a formidable villain because he isn't looking for money, power or world domination.

Jack who?

As in all the best Batman stories, The Dark Knight boils down to an ideological battle between Bruce Wayne and the Joker. In short, the former thinks the world is worth fighting for, while the latter will do anything imaginable to prove otherwise. The Joker is such a formidable villain because he isn't looking for money, power or even world domination. All he wants is to drag the good guys down to his level, proving that he was right about us all along.

Their battle of wills centers on idealistic, incorruptible district attorney Harvey Dent (a fine Aaron Eckhart), the upright white knight to Batman's shadowy vigilante. Dent's no-nonsense approach to law enforcement profoundly affects ethically gray folks like Bruce Wayne and Jim Gordon, so the Joker's attempts to push Harvey over the edge aren't just personal—they're political statements.

Michael Caine's lovingly played Alfred the butler notes: "Some men just want to watch the world burn," and so Batman is preoccupied, as most of us have been for the past seven years, with how far he must go to combat an inexplicable enemy. Batman decides to practice his own unique form of extraordinary rendition, and there's the strong suggestion that he ultimately does more harm than good.

There's so much to chew on here—too much, really, for such a condensed running time. Nolan whittles every interaction down to its essentials and cuts so quickly in and out of scenes that we can hardly absorb the story information before we're onto the next location. The score, by Hans Zimmer and James Newton Howard, is more like a repetitive, pulsating loop that gooses us along without a respite. Complicating matters further is Nolan and cinematographer Wally Pfister's decision to film most of the dialogue sequences in 360-degree tracking shots, which restlessly circle around the characters and add to the kinetic momentum.

The Dark Knight might be too aggressive and propulsive for its own good. You leave the theater feeling a bit worked over, and the bold thematic ambitions don't really kick in cerebrally until you've had some time to recuperate. It's about a half-hour of breathing room away from being the masterpiece it clearly yearns to be. ✖✖✖ impossible for me to discuss anything further. The movie jumps clear off the rails, going all kerflooey in ways everybody can nitpick, but only a bastard would tell. It's too bad, as the movie marks another impressive attempt by Smith to push the boundaries of his affable screen persona. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Hellboy II: The Golden Army ★★ ½ There's no shortage of fanciful creatures in director Guillermo Del Toro's sequel to his modest 2004 adaptation of Mike Mignola's comic book. Once again following Ron Perlman's crabby, cigar-smoking demon-spawn on another mission to save humankind from the malevolent whims of the netherworld, this visually extravagant sequel is so densely packed with monsters it sometimes feels like the cantina scene from Star Wars dragged out to feature length. If only the story, by Del Toro and Mignola, were half as sophisticated as the production design. There's too much sitcom squabbling from Perlman and his flammable squeeze (Selma Blair) as a huge ensemble cast jockeys for screen time. Del Toro has a contagious affinity for his misfits and weirdos, and the movie's highlight finds a heartbroken Hellboy and his fishy sidekick Abe having a drunken Barry Manilow sing-along. But the stakes feel all too low, with too many jokey digressions, leading to a fatal lack of urgency in the overly bombastic, effects-laden third act. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

The Incredible Hulk ★★ Director Ang Lee's 2003 artsy-fartsy take on the giant green guy was an epically wrongheaded effort, yet one that nonetheless contained some stray moments of real visual poetry. You'll find nothing of the sort in Louis Leterrier's just-the-facts-ma'am franchise reboot, which is about as impersonal as superhero flicks get. Calling it a bad movie wouldn't be fair, as making a bad movie requires taking chances. A timid, obsequious apology to fanboys for what happened last time around, this streamlined Hulk cuts to the chase, ignoring Stan Lee's still-potent psychological underpinnings in favor of special effects smackdowns. Leterrier is a boring yet competent craftsman who makes the most out of obvious soundstages and budget-conscious Canadian locations. But as far as recent comic flicks go, we're missing the crackling adult energy Robert Downey Jr. brought to Iron Man or the grim sophistication of Christopher Nolan's Batman Begins. (At Boston Common and in the suburbs.)

Indiana Jones And the Kingdom of the Crystal Skull ★★★ I'm still not sure there's any reason for this film to exist, but the extremely belated return of Dr. Henry Jones Jr. turns out to be a perfectly serviceable nostalgia piece. Keeping the jokey, family-comedy vibe of 1989's The Last Crusade, only with sharper filmmaking and a softer script, this romp through Atomic Age signifiers boasts some striking, at times purposefully cheesy visuals, along with Steven Spielberg's peerless mastery of kinetic energy. It's a treat to watch Harrison Ford deliver an honest-to-God performance again, and he perks up considerably during the too-few scenes when he resumes his screwball bickering with Karen Allen's Marion Ravenwood. The stakes are low but the spirits high, and Spielberg keeps everything bouncing along so jauntily, it's hard to even be bothered that the mystical alien gobbledygook plot doesn't make any sense. Crystal Skull is far more concerned with tickling viewers' memories of the hat, the whip and that rousing John Williams trumpet fanfare. (At Boston Common and in the suburbs.)

Iron Man ★★★ "I'm not really the hero type," quips Robert Downey Jr. with a glint in his eye, helpfully summing up this picture's off-kilter appeal in a nifty nutshell. The movie itself is well-assembled, fairly standard stuff, and there's not a plot point that won't feel familiar if you've sat through any of the billion or so comic book adaptations released in the past 10 years. Yet, somehow, Downey's snarky presence in the lead makes it seem like a wonderful act of subversion. According to formula, Iron Man winds up playing it safe and hitting all the expected, crowd-pleasing beats, but the movie works best if you consider it as an outsized chronicle of its star's own recent redemption—one of those weird pop culture artifacts in which actors comment upon themselves and their careers. Like Lindsay Lohan's I Know Who Killed Me, except not horrible. (At Boston Common and in the suburbs.)

The Last Mistress ★★★ Talk about a match made in heaven. First we've got French feminist provocateur Catherine Breillat, director of lurid, Rorschach-tests such as Romance and Fat Girl. Breillat was probably destined to team up with Asia Argento, a carnal, fearless actress who has proven in films like Scarlet Diva and The Heart Is Deceitful Above All Things that she has no concept of boundaries. The shocker here is that, for a healthy chunk of its running time, The Last Mistress is deceptively tasteful, beginning as a refined, 19th-century costume drama about an aspiring aristocrat (Fu'ad Ait Aattou) negotiating to marry a virginal beauty (Roxane Mesquida). But watch out once Argento shows up as Aattou's ferocious Spanish mistress. Their entanglement is a sexually charged doom-spiral, one made fascinating by Argento's wailing, unhinged performance. She's a literal bloodsucker, grunting and writhing her way through scenes to spell-binding effect. (At Kendall Square and Waltham Embassy.)

Sex and the City ★ ½ A telling early shot finds Sarah Jessica Parker and friends with their noses smushed up against the display case of a $50,000 diamond ring, thus setting the tone for the following 135 minutes of covetous consumption. With five costume changes, even the opening credits are a parade of product placements. Calling the film light on plot would be generous. Carrie and Miranda are treated shabbily by longtime loves, so they spend an entire calendar year ignoring apologies and wallowing in self-pity while Charlotte and Samantha drop by for drinks. Meanwhile, there are fashions, labels and lavish living spaces. Luxury porn and brand-name loyalty haven't been this fetishized since American Psycho. Inexplicably longer than Letters From Iwo Jima, Sex and the City leaves you feeling sorry for these shallow women and their empty, avaricious lives. (At Boston Common and in the suburbs.)

The Wackness ★★★ This wistful nostalgia piece is set in the summer of 1994 during the waning days of New York City's funky bohemian rot, right as Giuliani started turning Manhattan into an antiseptic playground for billionaires. Former Nickelodeon star Josh Peck comes of age as a melancholy teenage weed dealer, working Washington Square Park and falling hard for Olivia Thirlby's bored little rich girl. But the film is stolen outright by Ben Kingsley playing her dysfunctional step-dad, a regular customer of Peck's who's hell-bent on turning his mid-life crisis into a rowdy second childhood. Kingsley's natural tendencies towards hammy overacting are for once justified, as his character constantly ingests massive amounts of drugs. Often reminiscent of American Beauty, only absent the holier-than-thou moralizing, this sweet and evocative effort from writer-director Jonathon Levine never quite transcends the clichés of the "summer that changed my life" template. But where else can you watch a doped up Gandhi hooking up with Mary-Kate Olsen? (At Coolidge Corner, Kendall Square and Waltham Embassy.)

Wall-E ★★★★ Here's one for the ages. The crowning achievement from Pixar Animation Studios depicts a ruined Earth, some seven hundred years in the future, where a lonely trash compactor sorts his way through mountains of garbage, his only friend a remarkably resilient cockroach. Owing more to Charlie Chaplin than Bugs Bunny, the staggering early reels of Wall-E are devoid of any dialogue, working in a language of pure visual expression and brilliant soundscapes by Star Wars guru Ben Burtt. The love-sick travails of our adorable title character are as moving as any movie I've seen. In the second half, director Andrew Stanton switches gears into a less lyrical, more aggressively satirical mode, and introduces us to a future of overfed coach potatoes stranded in space after wrecking our planet. It's a pretty savage social commentary, but I was more interested in Wall-E and Eve, his shiny iPod-looking babe who packs a mean phaser and enlists a cuckoo's nest of malfunctioning robots to help save us all from bad programming. It's an instant classic. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Wanted ★★★ ½ This rude, ultra-violent delight is an R-rated Harry Potter for sexually frustrated cubicle drones. Or maybe it's The Matrix but with a sick sense of humor. Either way, it's nuts. James McAvoy stars as a cuckolded office nebbish swept up into an ancient guild of supernaturally skilled assassins; after a bit of bloody training, the boy learns how to curve bullets with his mind. Taking orders from a sentient weaving loom (seriously), this crazy cabal of gunsmiths run gorgeously amok, driving cars on top of buses, knocking trains off their tracks and ducking zig-zag sniper fire. And then the exploding rats show up. Director Timur Bekmambetov discovers at least three dozen new ways to show a bullet ripping through a skull, but his best special effect is costar Angelina Jolie, who delivers a droll, nearly silent performance that's all dirty smirks and sex appeal. Wanted is bonkers, tasteless and morally questionable. It is also exceedingly well-crafted, lightning-paced and enormous fun to watch. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

You Don't Mess With the Zohan ★★ Admit it: You've been dying to hear Adam Sandler's take on Israeli-Palestinian relations, haven't you? Lurching between inspiration and inanity, this bizarre farce stars Sandler as a supernaturally skilled Mossad agent bored by the cycle of Middle Eastern strife. Tired of capturing and recapturing his archnemesis (played with reckless abandon by John Turturro), Zohan fakes his death and heads for America to fulfill his dream of becoming a hairstylist, even if that means taking a job on "the Palestinian side of the street." Briefly picking up plotlines only to drop them just as quickly, this overlong film eventually comes around to depicting a lovely world where everybody can get along and eat hummus together, if they only learn to communicate. Coscripted by Sandler, TV Funhouse genius Robert Smigel and the ubiquitous Judd Apatow, You Don't Mess With the Zohan has almost enough insightful throwaway gags to make you forget all the gross-out sex, penis jokes and Dennis Dugan's abysmal, inattentive direction. (In the suburbs.)

The Young and the Reckless

A Good Bette

As part of a summer tribute to Lowell native Bette Davis, Harvard Square's Brattle Theatre screens her 1939 film Dark Victory on Aug. 11 and 12. Davis plays young socialite Judith Traherne, who discovers she has a lethal brain tumor and decides to live each day like it's her last. Of course, director Edmund Goulding makes sure she falls in love, throws wild parties and experiences manic depression before 100 minutes are up. Minus the tumor, it's a Britney Spears documentary.

FUSION WARRIORS

Return to Forever rekindles electricity in a historic reunion.

Return to Forever plays Bank of America Pavilion Aug. 6.

MILES DAVIS IS UNIVERSALLY CONSIDERED the father of '70s jazz fusion, given that all the prominent bandleaders of that electric jazz-rock hybrid served with the pioneering trumpeter at the dawn of the decade. In the case of Chick Corea, he had never touched an electric piano until Davis pointed to a battered Fender Rhodes on the bandstand of Boston's Jazz Workshop with directions for the future.

"It was quite simple. In fact, he used two words. He said, 'Play that,'" the Chelsea-born pianist recalls. "I knew zero about amplification or the audio part of getting a sound out of an instrument like that. So that's where I started, a hate relationship with electric keyboards."

Luckily, Corea warmed to the idea, not only going electric for Davis' groundbreaking Bitches Brew, but later widening his horizons for both the Rhodes and synthesizers in Return to Forever. That band reached a creative and commercial peak in the mid-'70s when Corea and cofounder Stanley Clarke, who himself revolutionized the bass guitar in jazz, teamed with funkified drummer Lenny White and fiery guitarist Al Di Meola to push the parameters for electric virtuosity.

Now, long after the fusion era flourished then fizzled into pop-jazz, both the melodic and muscular elements of Return to Forever's sound are on fresh display—on two fronts.

For starters, the classic quartet has launched its first tour in 25 years. "We finally confronted our schedules and decided that the summer of '08 was a good time," says Corea, who recently toured as a duo with banjo futurist Béla Fleck, whose RTF-influenced Flecktones open for Return to Forever at the Bank of America Pavilion Aug. 6.

"Things are moving along pretty quick," Corea says with coincidental irony from a train traveling 130 mph between French tour stops. "As we're getting our teeth back into the old material, things are starting to loosen up, and improvisations are expanding and happening. It's really a lot of fun, man."

In fact, across its initial dates in America, RTF trimmed a few songs from its setlist to make room for solo sections, mainly in an acoustic second set centered by "No Mystery," the title track from the group's Grammy-winning 1975 album.

That Corea tune, highlighted by dancing unison interplay in neo-flamenco style, is naturally included on The Anthology, a new two-CD set of the best tracks from the quartet's four albums. It includes 1973's Hymn of the Seventh Galaxy (the only one with original guitarist Bill Connors) and 1976's kinetic masterpiece Romantic Warrior in their entirety. And it's all remixed, remastered and ripe for rediscovery.

"A lot of stuff got masked earlier," says Corea, who coproduced the project with Clarke. "That's why it was fulfilling to extract all the excitement that was in those tracks."

Now that excitement is being rekindled onstage where, according to many reviews, RTF hasn't missed a step. "At first, there was a lot of nostalgia involved," says Corea, 67, whose group plucked Di Meola, now 53, out of Berklee at age 19 only to see him soar as a fleet-fingered guitar hero. "But now that we're on the road playing every night, all that is sort of whisked away and we're into it again. The songs are just acting as jumping-off points."

Corea has long enjoyed the jump. Though he began his career in New York, he studied piano from age 4 in Boston, where his father worked as a musician. "He'd take me to gigs, and the musicians in his band would come back to our apartment and my mother would make potatoes, eggs and frittata for everybody," Corea says. "I was a real tot and I was around that atmosphere. My dad and his friends were fun."

A liberal arts stint at Columbia lasted only a month after he caught Davis with John Coltrane at Birdland, Corea says, and following one semester at Juilliard, he started gigging. Through the '60s, he worked with Stan Getz, Dizzy Gillespie and Sarah Vaughan. He shared that "central gravity" in jazz with Clarke and White, Corea says, though they had "vastly different experiences and tastes." It all made RTF click.

Today, Corea says they haven't had time to write new music, but the group will record a live DVD and probably more down the line. "There's lots of talk about direction and new music and what we might do with sound," the keyboardist-composer says. "So I'm sure there'll be a future for this." ✖✖✖

Howl in the Night

Leaders of the Pack

For a while now, Canada's biggest export hasn't been Molson or hockey players, but Montreal rock bands. Wolf Parade, a current darling of the indie music scene, performs Aug. 2 at the Paradise Rock Club. The band's new album, At Mount Zoomer, dangerously relies on a marriage of sound, open space and improv. Recorded in the church studio owned by the original breakout Montreal rockers, Arcade Fire, it's their second album for Sub Pop, of Nirvana and Soundgarden fame. Perhaps dressing like Mozart and dueling with revolvers (as seen in their "I'll Believe in Anything" music video) will be the new grunge—without the angst or greasy hair. Julia Feltus

Rockie Horoscope { ROCKIE GARDINER }

HEART OF A LION

[JULY 23–AUGUST 22]
The eager, entrepreneurial spirit may get to you while energetic Mars in your Virgo money house receives approval from expansive Jupiter in Capricorn. Having these two growth-oriented planets in realistic earth signs could ease the effort of initiating a long-range project that'll take time to pay off. Since it'll be years before this rewarding trine relationship replicates itself, now might be the best shot you'll have in a while. If you're lucky enough to have the opportunity, why not give it serious thought?

VIRGO [August 23–September 22]
Don't dismiss the original idea Mercury just delivered because it's summertime, the living is easy and, since normally enthusiastic Jupiter is retrograde in your house of creativity, you're a little on the lazy side. There's a good chance that an equally good idea will come up again in the fall when your Mercury ruler transits your Libra money house and hopeful Jupiter is moving full steam ahead. Meanwhile you might as well enjoy what your favorite boys of summer are up to and what an inventive partner springs on you.

LIBRA [September 23–October 22]
Right now your receptivity to music, art and beautiful stuff is stretched to the max. Don't let the polarity between your appreciative Venus ruler and aesthetic Neptune go for naught or be wasted on experiences that don't live up to your expectations. You might also be in a highly spiritual state, so if there are churches to traipse through and yoga retreats to go on, then by hook or by crook, get there ASAP. And should any of these activities be considered "all in a day's work," so much the better for your career.

SCORPIO [October 23–November 21]
You could be in the somewhat precarious position of trying to balance career concerns with your family life. Although the personal planets, such as your Mars coruler and acquisitive Venus, are concentrated at the top of your solar chart where ambition and achievement reside, the outer planets—e.g., your Pluto coruler and idealistic Neptune—which shape the difference between generations, are holding court at the bottom. The tension between the two halves can affect something as basic as what you choose to read this summer.

SAGITTARIUS [November 22–December 21] Because impulsive Mars rarely holds back when the entrepreneurial spirit moves him, some Centaurs may feel obliged to consider the project the red planet proposes. Blame your currently retrograde (but ever-optimistic) Jupiter ruler in your Capricorn money house. Normally you would wait until prescient Jupiter was facing forward, but militaristic Mars is nothing if not insistent, particularly while it marches through your Virgo career zone. Perhaps you can resurrect a project that's been tabled for the time being?

CAPRICORN [December 22–January 20]
Writers get a boost from their partner—perhaps your agent or attorney instead—when literate Mercury sends a message to Jupiter in your sign. But that's only the beginning. The major impetus arrives about the time that action-oriented Mars trines enthusiastic Jupiter. Athletes ruled by muscular Mars and gamblers (Jupiter's folks) can also benefit from this mutually supportive aspect. But if none of the above applies to you, now would be a good time to discover just how benevolent you are.

AQUARIUS [January 21–February 18]
Take delight in the company you're keeping. Assuming you aren't on one of those off-beat, geek-inspired summertime sabbaticals, Aquarians are in the enviable position of entertaining affectionate Venus in their Leo marriage house along with the sunny sun. After Mercury joins them, you may also have a source of juicy gossip at your beck and call. While this forecast sounds fine and dandy, the truly magical moments come as the month ends and Venus parades her charms for idealistic Neptune in your sign.

PISCES [February 19–March 19]
Agitated or energized? Irate or excited? Macho Mars in your Virgo house of significant others walks a thin line between acceptable behavior and the other kind. However, when the God of Get Things Done focuses on an opportunity offered by experienced advisors (Jupiter in Capricorn), something special may click. The potential for success can appear greater than usual because Jupiter rarely sees the downside of any venture, even when it's retrograde. Need to replenish your faith? Wait for a "miracle" at the end of July.

ARIES [March 20–April 19]
Managing to extricate yourself from the tangled web you wove (or, just as likely, were trapped in) deserves a substantial reward. That should arrive around the time your Mars ruler finds favor with generous Jupiter in your Capricorn career house. Although their rewarding trine aspect was scheduled for June 26, Mars, the go-getter, tends to show up early to the party and stay till the bitter end. With the sun, sociable Venus and Mercury in Leo, the fire sign that loves to celebrate, you could soon be having one of the best times ever.

TAURUS [April 20–May 20]
Many Bulls will benefit from the supportive aspect between ambitious Mars in Virgo and entrepreneurial Jupiter in Capricorn, the other two down-to-earth signs. But it's those born on Cinco de Mayo who'll have the best chance of cashing in big time. If accumulating bucks is not high on your agenda, you might win the gold medal in an athletic event or get a great review for a stellar performance. Nothing connotes success as readily as the rewarding trine that links Jupiter's abundance to your natal Taurus sun.

GEMINI [May 21–June 20]
The season of profitability doesn't last forever. Before you know it, your Mercury ruler will exit your Cancer money house, leaving you somewhat wiser about finances and, let's hope, wealthier as well. Once the Messenger follows the sun and popular Venus into Leo, your thoughts may drift to the myriad ways you can enjoy your good fortune. Whether you take a short vacation or buy the latest expensive gadget, the desire to be acquainted with what's "hot" could be the engine that drives your celebration.

CANCER [June 21–July 22]
The Cancer-Capricorn full moon on Friday can resonate far longer in a Moon Child's consciousness than in any other sign. If you're still reeling from the effects of last weekend's lunar event, take some time to examine your reaction to whatever your partner said or did that set you off. That thing (be it anger, outrage, regret or humor) could provide the impetus to begin your Great American Memoir. Will the possibility of a significant payoff from prosperous Jupiter help you express yourself? That time is now.

ATTACK OF THE MILFS

Yummy Mummy Hip-Hop Troupe

Can You Get Pregnant From a Toilet Seat and Other Often-Asked Questions...

Is it just me, or is there something mildly amusing about the fact that at Planned Parenthood's House Party, most of the guests had kids?

Exactly what that says (I'm hoping it's profound concern for the well-being of children rather than bitter regret at having procreated) is open for debate, but what's not is the fact that it was a perfectly lovely evening—and edifying, to boot.

Hosted by smokingly hot newlyweds Tamar and Ken Frieze in their spanking Back Bay townhouse, the gathering included anecdotes from the Sexual Health Counseling and Referral Hotline by volunteer and soignée blonde Leigh Denny (who neglected to mention how often callers misguidedly dial her number in hopes of hooking up, but apparently it's a lot). Listening intently were such bright young things as newlywed Jennifer Aronson, prepster socialites Laird Elting and Carolyn Loucas, the former's gallant Gallic husband, Jean Robert, Dudley Do-Right doppelganger Duncan Hughes, the dashing Eric Romanow, über-hipster Jojo Longnecker, candy freak Jessica Lutzker, development diva Kim Lubin, the delightful Rachael Goldfarb, and one woman who related the following exchange with her husband:

"Oh my God, sweetheart! I'm losing my hair!"

"Well, honey," she said. "We can't have the trifecta—fat, broke AND bald—so you'd better get working on one of the other two."

Scarred for Life...

Speaking of responsible parenting, a group of high-profile young socialites decided to mortify their children (and spouses) by hosting a gathering where they performed a tightly choreographed hip-hop routine (a foolproof push toward a screwed-up adolescence if ever there was one).

Going on the theory that few things are more fun than embarrassing yourself, the supporters of the Charlotte Saltonstall Bigham Foundation, which gives money to various charities, formed the Rhythmically Challenged Yummy Mummy Hip-Hop Troupe and performed under a big white tent on the lawn of Nancy Adams' home in Chestnut Hill.

In addition to Adams, the perpetrators included such high-profile socialites as Sukey Forbes Bigham, Randi Cutler, Kristina Hare Lyons, Julia Hicks de Peyster, Kim Kozol, Rebecca Liwerant, Kaia Miller Goldstein, Kristin Mugford, Amy Novello, Stacey Philipkosky, Cecelia Rappaport, Patty Ribakoff, Lucienne Sanchez, Lori Sidman, Erica Sperberg, Jennifer Walske and Alicia Winn, who shook their money-makers to Sir Mix-A-Lot's "Baby Got Back" for a group of 200-or-so (mostly appalled) onlookers. Thankfully, there was also a barbecue buffet and a mechanical bull.

As the invitation pointed out, the evening elicited mixed reactions, ranging from "You guys dance like a bunch of white girls" and "Mummy, please don't do this—you are SO lame," to a husband who said, "If I write a big check, will you do a pole-dance routine next year?" and another who said, "Honey, we'll need to move out of town after this."

Here's hoping the foundation has enough money to pay for all their therapy.

Mirror, Mirror, on the Wall, Who's the Chicest of Them All?

The lucky winner of our "Guess the Fashion Editor" contest from the June 11 issue was the aptly named Sarah Mink, a recent graduate of Beaver Country Day School in Chestnut Hill, who correctly identified the headless photo as The Boston Globe Magazine's own Tina Sutton. Mink has won a tremendously fashionable Improper Bostonian T-shirt, which, incidentally, goes with everything from cowboy boots to Christian Louboutins. Congratulations, Sarah! ✖✖✖

Inside Edition

As my husband drove us back into Boston from Maine, he commented that the city finally felt like home. It only took two years! Urban nomads who passed our 20s in Manhattan, Washington, D.C., and Chicago, we know the challenges of learning an unfamiliar place. It takes more than a sense of direction and a tour of the best restaurants to feel like you really belong. I remember meeting a friend my first weekend here for a Josh Ritter concert. "See you at Cope-ley Square," I told her. Thankfully, she corrected me.

To save all you newcomers from yourselves, we've compiled 100 insider facts every local knows. Covering Boston's history, misnomers and dirty little secrets, the list should put you on the fast track to assimilation. And who better to welcome you than cover girl Shayna Seymour, a producer/reporter at WCVB-TV's Chronicle, a show about New England. Start watching it—but not before flipping through Bill Brett's photos in this issue, a preview of his latest book out this Labor Day. More than trivia, they capture the city's spirit.

Back Bay Bliss

SHANGRI-SPA

In the deeply sybaritic circles of the Back Bay, the most anticipated newcomer of the year remains the deluxe Mandarin Oriental, Boston. More specifically for locals, the hotel's 16,000-square-foot luxury spa. Vistas of crystal steam rooms, ice fountains, vitality pools, and exotic woods and stonework will be unveiled in October (a fire having delayed the summer opening and moved our photo shoot to the garden). Sharon Holtz is the director of this gargantuan slice of Shangri-La.

"I'm a big fan of massage," says Holtz, who used to be a massage therapist herself. "Also acupuncture. And my yoga practice keeps me balanced."

Holtz opened the spa at the Mandarin's Bermuda property and most recently directed the award-winning one in Miami. "At times [being a spa director] can be stressful," she says. "It's about finding creative solutions." For instance, a famous client once requested that she send her therapists out on a house-call. To a private yacht. "Unfortunately, we needed them at the hotel." Another time, a celebrity insisted on entering through a private, VIP entrance, which Holtz went to "great lengths to arrange." Then the person just breezed through the front door.

"When spa directors get together, we joke about the fact that we ought to write a book," she says. For now, though, getting past the hurdles of building, staffing and repairing fire damage seems enough. "Today, we turned on the water feature in our reception area," she laughs. "It was so exciting!"

Drink of the Moment

Port Authority

Kelly Coggins, Rialto's 26-year-old wine and beverage director, sits cross-legged by a banquette. Dressed in multihued sneakers and bright socks, the scruffy Coggins peers through his thick-framed glasses at a serving of small-batch port and says something that hardly needs verbalizing: "I'm a wine geek."

The port in question is from Sutton Cellars, a microwinery in Northern California. Produced in the solera style—a method more common for sherries—the port is sweeter than the standard brawny after-dinner drink. As such, the wine lends itself to cocktails (at least according to the producer, who sold Rialto five cases of the stuff). Coggins is happy to oblige. "Ultimately, my job is [to] find a lot of toys for my bartenders to play with."

The Sutton Solera Sangria ($12) is the product of late-night dabbling between Coggins (wine geek) and bartender Todd Maul (self-appointed bar nerd). There are fruity tones from apricot liqueur and house-made grenadine, but Rialto's iteration separates itself with tequila. "I'm from Texas originally, so tequila and I are very happy," Coggins explains. "It has that nice agave note that provides a light minerality. If you can imagine honey but dry, not sweet, you get a little bit of that in the cocktail."

Throughout the creation process, Coggins and crew keep an eye on the menu and drink and dinner interplay. "I like sangria because it has an awakening note," Coggins says. "When it hits the palette it causes you to salivate a little." From the new bar offerings, he recommends the grilled mushrooms with hazelnut vinaigrette ($4). "You get the light fruit, and the salty and earthy flavors, then the mushrooms come out."

With the rich port flavors at the front and crisp fruit sweetness on the finish, the sangria can stand alone. See for yourself before the five cases run out.

Good Eats

Much-Loved Lobster

Back when Jasper White manned his illustrious waterfront bistro, the sophisticated clientele tossed aside cloth napkins and flatware for one particular dish: the house-special pan-roasted lobster. White let that ship sail in the mid-'90s, sending seafood fiends into a tizzy. Luckily, he took the crustacean—split, roasted to a fiery red and sauced with a faintly boozy, herb-butter reduction—and gave it a "big bucks" spot on his Summer Shack menu. The only difference? Tying on a lobster bib now puts you in good company.

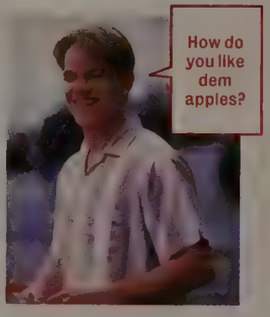
ASK THE EXPERT



Q: CAN NEWCOMERS PICK UP A BOSTON ACCENT?

ROSALYN NEGRÓN GOLDBARG ASSISTANT PROFESSOR OF ANTHROPOLOGY AT UMASS BOSTON

"Picking up a Boston accent is not unlike picking up a liking for the Red Sox: Some acquire it effortlessly over time and others have to make a conscious effort. What's key (for both) is social networks. We can pick up accents as we converge or accommodate our speech to our spouse's, close friends' and coworkers' speech. So [people] can spend decades living in the Boston area without a noticeable change in their accent if members of their immediate social network (those we spend the most time interacting with) are not speakers of the Boston dialect. Even living in one of Boston's working-class, traditionally Irish or Italian neighborhoods, where the accent is common, is not enough in itself. Want to pick up the Boston accent without hiring a speech coach? Try expanding your social network."

Good Gewurz

No one's neutral about Gewurztraminer. The grape with the most relentless personality, its pungent aromas and in-your-face flavors have a tendency to assault you, engendering either a passionate devotion or absolute revulsion. Some have called it a red wine in drag. From a grape-growing standpoint, it's easy for the taste to fly out of control, so there's little margin for error. The magical wine-making region of Alsace, in northeastern France, has best tamed Gewurztraminer's wild exuberance. With its abundant richness and body, massive fruit flavor and lingering bittersweet spiciness, top-quality Alsace Gewurz, as it's called, is just the ticket for many of the milder Latin- or Asian-inspired fish and poultry dishes we're enjoying so much lately. The following are my recent blind tasting champions, and none of them are so far out that they'd offend newcomers to Gewurztraminer. Maybe.

Hugel, Alsace, 2006 (Brix, Boston, $24) The venerable house of Hugel has really hit it with their 2006, a flamboyantly perfumed Gewurz with golden-raisin, white-pepper and rose-petal scents that are luscious and tantalizingly spicy. All of Hugel's wines are reliably dry, which is huge with Gewurztraminer, because the grape's acid levels are so low that any residual sugar tends to be magnified. There's a mellowness but also a vibrancy based on the anise-like spice that vaults this one to the top of the class. Try it with salty dishes, such as cured meats or smoked fish.

Pierre Sparr "Reserve," Alsace, 2006 (Atlas Liquors, Medford, $14.99) Sparr's wines are always nicely balanced and not too overt in style. This Gewurztraminer has a mellow butterscotch, pineapple, floral-scented personality, with creamy, half-sweet, half-bitter flavors that are balanced by just a touch more than the usual acidity. This is probably the one I'd go for if I'd never had Gewurz before. It's got a slightly more understated charm than the other selections and a more subtle spearmint-accented spiciness.

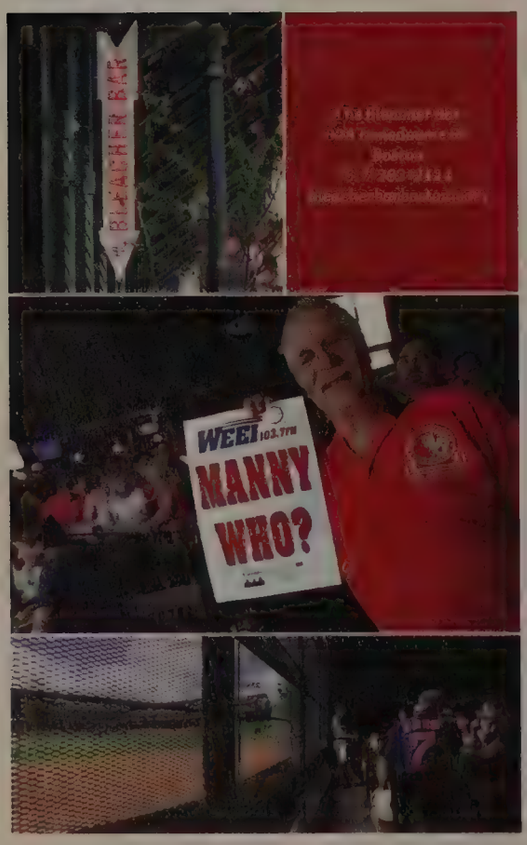
Marc Kreydenweiss "Kritt," Alsace, 2006 (Downtown Wine & Spirits, Davis Square, $34.99) Kreydenweiss is a fully biodynamic producer whose honeyed, thickly textured Gewurztraminer is medium-gold in color with an exotic fragrance of pineapple, grapefruit, lychee and ginger. It works really nicely with a number of Thai preparations—the wine's lush raisiny element, undertone of heat and ripe creaminess tango smartly with the riot of fruit and spice flavors on the palate. This is definitely on the oily, rich side of the Gewurz spectrum, so if you're already a devotee, give it a try, but novices should probably beware.

Trimbach, Alsace, 2005 (Winestone, Brookline, $21) Trimbach, a 12th generation family producer who makes unflinchingly dry, steely wines, tends to dominate the Alsace market locally. Part of the reason is consistency. You can count on getting a clean, pure wine that faithfully reflects the grape's personality to its very essence. This Gewurz is textbook: floral, rose-petal scented, with a touch of vanilla bean and even some slightly vegetal, celery-salt accents to round it off. On the palate there's a touch of crisp apple, but also a pleasant almost caramel-like creaminess that complements fish like grilled Mahi.



Going Out

BAR WITH A VIEW

Out in the centerfield wall, in the old visitor's batting cage and under a stepped roof supporting the weight of thousands of Fenway Faithful, is the Bleacher Bar. Open since May 16, the venue aims to be a different kind of Lansdowne destination.

"A lot of places take it for granted that you're in Fenway Park," chef Art Welch says. "That's why we stressed the importance of this being a neighborhood place." A clinching factor in this approach is the capacity, capped at 200 but generally kept around 170, thus avoiding the crushing crowds of other bars on game day. "Even if you get here at 6, you're going to get in by 6:15," GM Ryan Jones assures.

The Bleacher Bar's biggest advantage is the view—a panoramic of the park that makes that whole HD thing seem a bit bush league. Prime seats are given a 45-minute limit, but with a menu specializing in deli sandwiches, you'll be through a brisket sandwich ($9) and on to the blueberry pie ($4) before you're through chewing out Melky Cabrera from behind the one-way glass.

However, don't be fooled into thinking that the shaded glass in the men's room will keep you just as anonymous. Apparently following some archaic ballpark bylaw making it illegal to take a leak in private, the window above the urinals gives both you a view of the game and your buddies a chance to heckle your performance. "We've been blown away with the feedback," a surprised Jones says. "It's awesome, but it's also kind of funny at the same time." When the fellow world champion Celtics were visiting the friendly confines, even their coach fell for the trap. "The look on Doc Rivers' face was priceless," Jones recalls.

Open year-round, the Bleacher Bar hopes its neighborly approach will keep fans coming even after the season winds to a close. "We attract a more mature, professional crowd, and that's a product of the atmosphere we've created," Jones explains. "People have been looking for a place to call their own." A place where people know your name, and everyone can see you pee.

Question for Alisa Neely
What are the top five clothing items newcomers need?

Alisa Neely is a fashion consultant. Learn more at StyleScout.net.

1. A pair of well-tailored black pants like Prada's Techno pant from Saks Fifth Avenue or J.Crew's city-fit wool gabardine trouser.

2. Black pencil skirt like Club Monaco's high-waisted pencil skirt or Helmut Lang's gleaming wool pencil skirt.

3. Jeans of any cut so long as they flatter your body type. A straight leg is almost universally complementary while a skinny leg should only be worn by the slim legged or tucked into boots. For a casually professional look, consider a trouser-style pair.

4. Warm yet sophisticated winter coat that can be paired with either jeans or a skirt. A Mackage trench coat or winter coat from Saks Fifth Avenue would work.

5. Cold-weather boots, like Fiorentini+Baker's 704 Buckle Boot or Roberto del Carlo's flat leather knee boot from Barneys, that are versatile enough to go with the above items.

SNEAKY SUPPER

Dinner done "Underground"

"WE HAVE HAD OUR EYE ON YOU," the letter said. "Due to your history of good taste and bold nature, you have been selected by the conspirators as a potential guest." Sure, the note wasn't addressed to me, but my editor could read between the lines. Valued as the guy who tries the offal or polishes off last week's sushi from the office fridge, I was dispatched to a clandestine dinner presented by "The Underground."

Secret supper clubs are sprouting up nationwide. The reason for the cloak-and-dagger routine is it's illegal to charge for food from an uninsured, uninspected kitchen. As we've established, I'm not a real germaphobe, and I assumed someone at the party knew the Heimlich, so that just left me to RSVP and agree to the $100 admission fee. Soon after, I received a call informing me of the rendezvous point and dress code—"somewhere between James Bond and rock 'n' roll."

On the assigned day, I walked to the BPL wearing a stylish suit and a concealed Beretta. Using her keen eye for detail, my dining companion, photo editor Katie Noble, spotted our fellow guests: a small huddle dressed for hipster prom. The first person I met introduced himself as "Blade." I was sure I'd misheard. Clearly this fellow with the pocket-square hadn't named himself after a deadly weapon. I checked by introducing him to Katie. To my delight, I'd heard right, and as they conversed, I smiled at the auspicious start to the night's entertainment.

Shuttled out to Newton, we gathered in the backyard of some well-to-dos and mingled over oysters. There were chefs, financiers, bar owners and a couple of young students agonizing over the gravity of their love lives. Thankfully, there was also a bar stocked with enough booze to intoxicate a T-Rex, and it was somewhere between Katie's second caipirinha and me daring her to climb into the tree house that word got round that our hosts were of the unwitting variety. Seems they'd run off to Asia, and their housesitter had fallen for the head chef's powers of persuasion.

He's a young guy, and even after 25 straight hours of prep, he exhibited the kind of boundless energy that makes you want to nap. The former sous chef, now a full-time musician, cofounded the Washburn Underground in 2005, because, as he says, "I come up with these ideas, and I can make it happen, so I feel a duty." It's an endearing idealism, which miraculously doesn't make you want to throttle him.

In the dining room, I sat next to an amicable cattle farmer who went to culinary school in Bilbao. Katie sat next to Blade. (Yea!) The six-course meal began with a spring-roll salad and then presented a choice of "Rosas del Diablo" (a roulade of chicken, rasher and capicola) and "Les Ailes de Cieux" (deboned chicken wings stuffed with Dijon-Marsala mascarpone). I went for the wings: Tasty but topped with flakes of flavorless gold, they demonstrated how the chefs had exceeded the budget. Understaffed, the dishes came sporadically, but the beverages flowed with regularity. After the Southwest ravioli, the waitress whispered to me, "People are really getting toasted."

"I know," I responded, before ordering another glass of Rioja.

I won't say things devolved, but after we played a round of word games and a mute teenager banged out the Zelda theme on the piano, it became apparent that we'd gone down the rabbit hole. I'd been expecting a grown-up dinner party. What I got was adults playing dress up. The dishes were good, not gourmet, but playful—which was really the point. More than an ego stroke of ingredients and technique, the supper club offers a dining experience. This is Boston. Our restaurant meals don't end stumbling home at 4 am. For that you've got to go underground—off the puritanical radar for something both indulgent and genuine. It's choice worth making. ✖✖✖

Beauty

STICKS NOT STONES

Beauty maven Marc Harris knows his clientele. So for his fourth business location, Harris savvily chose ground zero for stress: the Financial District. His two-story spa has a full list of services, including facials and peels, along with the usual salon offerings. But in these anxious economic times, the suits should head straight for the Bamboo Massage—as I did. Unsure what to expect, I was pleasantly surprised when my therapist whipped out smooth bamboo stalks, which she used to loosen my kinks. The treatment felt gentler than a hands-on deep-tissue massage. A heat junkie, I also enjoyed the smaller warmed shoots. Hey, I wasn't crunching numbers or fighting loan sharks all day, but after 80 minutes it erased my troubles.

STAY AWAY

TO THE BEER-SWILLING ELEVATOR mechanic on St. James:
Thanks for cheating me out of $2,000! You should have taken your crap with you when you moved out. You're lucky it wasn't worse. You're so stupid you can't even find your precious motorcycle seat (that you bought for me, I might add). Pay me what you owe, and I'll tell you where it is—you're such a big spender. Who do you think you are to make that decision anyway? I "took all your money"? YOU took my house and moved your trailer trash in because she wants my life! You deserve each other. Funny, now that I'm rid of you, I've become the person you always wanted me to be! Keep sucking up those beers. Real attractive. Remember one thing: You stuck the knife in, then you twisted it. What comes around goes around. You'll get yours. The girls have long forgotten you exist; we've made sure of that. Better start making up those lost pension hours! By the way, thanks for the three-bedroom townhouse in Vancouver! I hope I never lay eyes on your lying, cheating ass again!

Good riddance

Alert for married women or women in relationships:

There is a home wrecker lurking in your midst. She frequents the Cambridge area and is loud and annoying—one of those dumb asses that likes to hear herself yap (or talk as you would call it). With a sick sense of pride, she has informed people that her last long-term relationship was with a married man whose wife was nine months pregnant. Even after she found out, she continued the relationship. This is an immoral, stupid person. I believe in karma, but this person has her eye out for married men. Beware. Description: short (and I mean very short) and stupid. If you see her, be careful. Hold on to your man like he's your life jacket, before she gets her tramp claws into him. You married, smart, beautiful, wonderful, committed women, you will thank me in the end.

Marriage saver

To the despicable dog-owner:

Who knew that a creature whose usual horizon extends no more than the height of your kneecaps would be so scared at fire raining down out of the sky? So [scared that] it would break away from you in the mob at the corner of Mass. Ave. and Memorial Drive when the fireworks (finally) began July 4th at 10:30 pm? I can't say I blame the poor thing, though. I grabbed my bike and my husband's arm when I saw your dog bolt down the street and across Mass. Ave., down a side street, toward MIT's tennis courts. I saw you sashaying down the street in your orange bowling shirt, eyes mechanically fixed forward, not even bothering to look behind the many shrubs you passed, or ask any of the dozens of people who saw your dog dart across the street if they had seen it. You are as inspiring a pack leader for this unstable little creature as my deaf and half-blind cat would be. We tracked your dog all the way down to Putnam Ave., near Vertex Pharmaceuticals. We crossed parking lots, railroad tracks and parks, asking along the way if anyone had seen it. My husband actually was within two arms' lengths of it, but lost it in traffic. I'd risk falling off my bike and scraping my knee 10 more times if it meant I could keep you from finding it. You do not deserve to own a dog, if you are too stupid to realize it is unstable and that NO DOG should be brought into a situation it perceives as life-threatening, such as a fireworks display. I've spent the night praying it was not your dog that caused the accident on Memorial Drive that necessitated the ambulances to race toward the BU bridge park after the show was over. Got to go now—to look for your dog again. Thanks for a ruined holiday, where the only fireworks I saw were the ones exploding in my head.

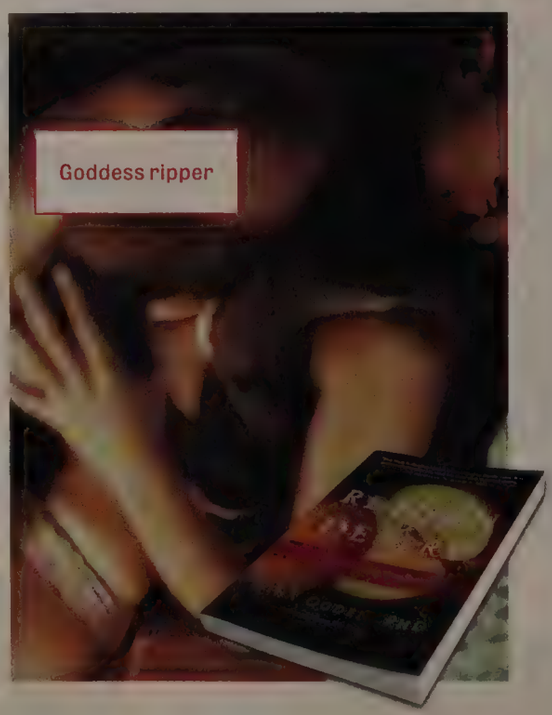
HOW DIVINE

Spiritual sexuality and arresting architecture

The Angel on the Bedroom Ceiling

WONDERFUL AS SEX CAN BE it's also riddled with mystery and, at times, real sorrow. Sometimes desire goes south (or not south enough!) if abuse, illness, betrayal or fear intervenes. But Gina Ogden, in her breezily inviting book, suggests that some version of the spiritual wafts through the bedsheets of desire. What she terms ISIS (Integrating Sexuality and Spirituality) entails research and workshops that delve into a broad landscape of fantasy, memory, symbolism and deep connection to expand and enhance the erotic. Sentence-completions like "I can turn off my sexual desire by..." are countered by "I can turn on by..." One abused woman used a rock to symbolically absorb and then discard her pain, finally throwing it into the water. The feelings of vulnerability and openness often attributed to women are discovered in many men. Rhapsodic quotes from both genders, gay and straight, capture a richer and deeper sense of what sexiness can be. Ogden explores soulful connections or "joining of energies" between two people and discovers things poetic and divine.

Cambridge sex therapist Gina Ogden writes about the erotic life in The Return of Desire.



GOOD GERMAN Gropius House in Lincoln

Less Is More Is Beautiful

THOUGH MADE OUT OF TRADITIONAL New England building materials, this Walter Gropius–designed house was revolutionary in 1937 for its clarity and purity. Now, almost 70 years later, it still looks strikingly modern. Gropius was the founder of the German Bauhaus design school, whose look and philosophy featured clean lines, open spaciousness—all delivered in a paradoxically enlivening palette of gray, white and black with occasional subtle touches of pink. Traditionally somber wood, brick and fieldstone bring lightness instead. Gropius borrowed industrial elements like chrome poles set wide apart and strip windows that whoosh around corners. There's acoustical plaster and indoor clapboards. His friend Marcel Breuer, designer of the famous cane chair, lived right down the hill and made like-minded classically spare furniture for this house. The tour lovingly elaborates on the meaning and beauty of every element here, including the bedroom with an adjacent dressing room divided by a large window, intimate yet open, and the round dining table illuminated by an encircling light. The spaces here breathe deliciously.

Gropius House (68 Baker Bridge Road, Lincoln; 781-259-8090; gropiushouse@historicnewengland.com) offers tours through Oct. 15.

Well Bread Crisp francese and ficelle from Iggy's. Soft German rye and earthy buckwheat-walnut from Clear Flour. The artisan bread-baking duel between these Charles River shops has been long-lived, and, until recently, virtually unchallenged. Until, according to Ron Siegel, pigs began to fly. The sourdough loaves he was baking out of a small Maine kitchen sold out faster than he could pull them from the oven—proof that, indeed, anything can happen. While that bread pays the bills at his five retail shops—his latest storefront joins Coolidge Corner's food scene—specialty flavors like orange, roasted pistachio and cranberry, as well as chocolate, have garnered quite a following.

REAL ESTATE BRIGHT SPOTS

Despite the national real estate bust, plenty of property values in Boston seem as sky-high as gas prices. Have you been to an open house in the South End lately? Thankfully, "areas like Hyde Park, Jamaica Plain, Allston and Brighton are still doing fine and their property value ranges are still affordable," says Sam Fard, a broker-consultant at ERA Boston Real Estate Group. Indeed, the median sale price over the past year for a single-family house in Hyde Park, Jamaica Plain, Fort Hill, Mattapan, Mission Hill, Allston and Brighton has ranged from $280,000 to $625,000; $150,00 to $480,000 for a condo. "It is a buyer's market now," continues Fard, adding that economic indicators for the Boston region look promising over the next two years. "Any property investment within these areas will definitely appreciate within the near future."

NUT HITTER

Why Ming Tsai cheers for Seattle.

Forget about beer and cigarettes: Peanuts will be a controlled substance at Safeco Field for two Seattle Mariners games this season. Each evening, a designated section will feature 150 seats specially cleaned and checked for peanut residue, signage alerting fans to the "peanut controlled area," and a ban on the nut both throughout the section and at the nearest concession stand.

Controlled substance

Ming Tsai, father of a peanut-allergic son, applauds the plan as "fantastic, amazing.... It's such a battle to build awareness that [the allergy] is a life-and-death thing." In fact, Tsai says, it's impossible to entirely contain the threat of cross-contamination in a situation where "molecules can kill."

Can he imagine a similar approach at Fenway Park? "It could be totally doable at Fenway," he says, then pauses to reconsider. "If there are unsold tickets." Noting the difference in popularity between the Red Sox and the Mariners, and the scale of the Safeco plan, a Fenway official concurs: "Unfortunately, we're sold out every single game."

Because Tsai's son isn't severely peanut-allergic, his father has brought him to Fenway, but reluctantly wrote off the opportunity to attend the Olympics in Beijing because the trip posed too much of a risk: "He'd have to be in a bubble," Tsai sighs.

What's going on with Barbara Lynch's mega-project on the South Boston waterfront? Opening later than anticipated—which means it's like every other restaurant—the ambitious undertaking will be unveiled in three stages. "The bar, right after Labor Day; the casual dining [eatery], which includes a bakery and a chocolate shop, in October; and the fine dining [restaurant], around the holidays," Lynch says. Which is just fine with her: "I'd go crazy if I tried to do all three at once!"

Still not finalized are the names of the upcoming hot spots and the title of Lynch's cookbook, to be published next fall.

One of the great hotels of the World

Dining { ERIN BYERS MURRAY WITH MICHAEL LEVITON }

LIKE MOM USED TO MAKE

Hungry Mother refines down-home cuisine.

MAID IN HEAVEN Michael Leviton digs into Barry Maiden's fried oysters.

MICHAEL LEVITON was running late the night we met at Hungry Mother in Kendall Square. The chef/owner of Lumière in Newton and Persephone in Fort Point had been stuck in traffic but as soon as he sat down, seemed instantly at ease. He had been a long-time mentor to Hungry Mother chef Barry Maiden and was looking forward to a reunion as well as a chance to try Barry's Appalachian-inspired cuisine.

The space had a soft, vintage vibe with creative touches like a picture-frame lighting installation in the bar and cookbook pages papering the bathroom walls. It felt homey without an ounce of dowdiness. After we settled into the library, a small darkened room adjacent to the main dining space, Barry came out to say hello and give his old boss a hug.

"I've always wanted to open a place like this," Michael told me after Barry ducked back into the kitchen. "This is just the right concept right now." Michael actually donated an old ice cream machine to the cause. He wasn't the only one. One wall of the bar is filled with the names of individual donors who gave money to help Barry and his partners, Rachel Miller Munzer, Alon Munzer and John Kessen, realize their goal. "All of the trials and tribulations of opening this place, I've been there for all of it," Michael said.

The page-long menu features a mix of Southern classics—like the deviled eggs and smoky ribs you'd find at a Tennessee backyard picnic, made from recipes passed down through generations. Michael was thrilled to see evidence of his own influence, as well as Barry's devotion to sourcing locally. As part of his involvement with Chefs Collaborative, Michael strives to improve sustainability within the restaurant community. It's an obsession that Barry and other protégés have clearly taken with them.

Liquor . . . . . Full bar

To start, Michael got a Fisherman's Brew (made in Gloucester, $5) and I tried a glass of the Terlan rosé ($7.) We ordered the warm beef tongue canapé ($3) and pimiento cheese ($4) to tide ourselves over (which is how the snacks are listed on the menu), while he filled me in on his back story from Wesleyan grad to sustainability–minded cook. After a stint in New York and time at Upstairs at the Pudding in Cambridge, Michael opened Lumière in 1999, where Barry served as his chef de cuisine for five years.

While talking, we dug into the fried Chesapeake Bay oysters ($13), which had an addictive kick of heat buried in the crusty exterior. When I asked what it was, Michael just smiled as if to say, "I'm not giving away our secret." Our catfish paté and summer sausage plate ($10) was a simple, snacky feast made mostly in house (Michael and Barry experimented with smoking their own pastrami at Lumière). For dinner, Michael went straight for the Chatham-caught bluefish ($24). "Diners now are so used to flavorless fish. It's great to get something that tastes the way it's supposed to," he said, savoring the food in front of him.

Fried Chesapeake Bay oysters

Chatham bluefish

Cornmeal-crusted catfish

Rhubarb sorbet

I tried the cornmeal-crusted catfish ($17), which was an earthy, flavorful dish (there was that crusty coating again), and we split a plate of moist, crumby cornbread ($4). For dessert, we each had a few bites of buttermilk pie and a scoop of that day's special, rhubarb sorbet. Michael happily nodded at the bowl. "You know he got the rhubarb right here in New England. See? It's not the bright red like you see in the markets," Michael said. "He's doing it right." Spoken like a true mentor. ***

DIARY-A-ZINE

You'll never guess what happened to me today.

RECENTLY I WAS THINKING about writing and a great idea occurred to me: How cool would it be if I could somehow write about my random daily experiences and then widely disseminate that text for people to read? Like, maybe such a thing could go on the Internet? It'd be like an Internet diary, and it could even get a catchy made-up name to describe it, like "Onlineadiary" or "Internetajournal." That'd be a hit, I'll bet. It's just too bad the technology doesn't exist. Fortunately, though, I have a magazine column, so I'm the rare lucky fellow with the means to tell you about disjointed trivial events in my life, such as City Turkey and Summer Santa and the Greatest Comeback Ever.

City Turkey is a large wild turkey who lives in Southie. A couple months ago, I was parking when I saw, to my amazement, a giant turkey strutting down the sidewalk. He seemed very nonchalant, like it's normal for turkeys to go urban. I thought about approaching him but decided against it on the grounds that I'm unsure whether turkeys are mean. I suspect they are. I'm no ornithologist, but turkeys look like they might be related to swans, and everyone knows that swans are terrible.

Instead, I sat in my car and snapped a cell-phone photo so that people would believe my story. This is possibly the greatest side effect of the cell-phone era—when everyone's got a camera at all times, you can back up your wild-ass claims with evidence. When my mother claimed she saw a black panther in Maine in 1987, we all made fun of her. But when I saw a turkey in Southie, or my colleague, Rich, spotted Cedric Maxwell trying a massage chair at Brookstone, we were ready with our phones. I'd show you the guy who looked like he was driving a street sweeper naked, but he kept speeding away every time I pulled up next to him.

Segue alert: My wife, Heather, wishes she'd had her phone with her a couple weeks ago, when she went for a morning run and saw Santa Claus. Santa walked up—red suit, beard, the whole deal—and asked for directions to the L Street Bathhouse. Now, Heather was with our dog, Manny, and one interesting thing about dogs is that they can tell when a person's sketchy. So at this point Manny began behaving in a manner that suggested that all he wanted for Christmas was to chew Santa's face off. I've only seen Manny act this way once before, when a drunk guy wearing a leather vest and no shirt tried to pet him on East Broadway. Manny growled at that guy, who responded, "You know what? He's right."

It was the best comeback ever, and I'd appreciate it if you could help me spread the word.

Summer Santa never got a chance to explain what he was doing down by the beach early on a July morning, or why he needed to get to the L Street Bathhouse. Maybe someone there asked him for some new gym equipment, which would be a reasonable request. I don't want to say the L Street Bathhouse gym equipment is old-school, but the last time I bench-pressed there, the bar looked like a stick with cannonballs on the end and my spotter was a guy with a unitard and a handlebar mustache.

Unfortunately, Heather had no timely quip for Santa, given that she was straining with all her might to prevent him from being mauled, but allow me a moment to brag about my personal Best Comeback Ever.

A couple weeks ago, two friends and I were aboard a high-speed ferry. We were outside. It was loud. We were talking and, I suppose, using foul language, as is customary when aboard seafaring vessels. About 10 feet away stood two girls who were about 12 years old. Right next to us against the railing were a man and his wife. Soon enough, the guy indignantly blurted, "Hey, watch your language. There are little kids right there." Eyeing the distant tweens and pausing for a moment to note the roaring diesel engines, one of my friends turned and said with a slight smile, "OK, sure." Correctly sensing some condescension in that response, our agitator continued, "And if you think that's funny, then you guys are assholes!" To which I shot back: "Hey, watch your language!"

Decimated by the awesomeness of my comeback, he shut up for the remainder of the trip. As did I, since I was too busy mentally congratulating myself to speak. It was the best comeback ever, and I'd appreciate it if you could help me spread the word. Just type this whole column into an e-mail and forward it to everyone you know, please. And when you're done, let me know, because I've got to tell the entire world about all the inappropriate lettuce-and-tomato garnishes I've been getting lately. Lettuce and tomato with pasta? Lettuce and tomato with a lobster roll? Seriously, people in China would totally think that's hilarious, I bet. ✖✖✖

AVENGING ARIZONA

Brady, Belichick and the boys put the past behind them.

NEAR THE END OF JULY, after the final Manny being Manny episode, I came to this conclusion: Football season couldn't get here quick enough. The start of training camp signals that once again, "It's on." But for Bill Belichick and his staff, it's been on for more than five months now.

"I understand for you it is the first day of the football season," Belichick said to the assembled media circus at training camp. "But for us, the first day of the season was probably the Monday after the Super Bowl.... I don't mean to be disrespectful, but it's not like we rolled out the ball today and were like, 'OK, let's start playing football.' We have been at it for a while and this is just another step in the process. An important one, but another one."

Important? I don't know if the coach realizes how important. I know many, many people who haven't fully moved on from the Super Bowl. I'm one of them. I still panic anytime I even think about Arizona. Why didn't Rodney Harrison knock that ball down? Why did Richard Seymour let go of Eli Manning's jersey? Why didn't Asante Samuel make a play he's made so many times in his career? Why? Why? Why?

One thing that should help erase those memories is the quarterback. Tom Brady is back, fresh off traveling the globe. The team goes as he does. Period. Does Brady have anything to prove after last year's disappointing finale? Well, maybe, but you won't hear him admit it.

"I don't think about proving anything to anybody except proving that we can work hard," he said. "You don't focus on proving people wrong. You just focus on doing the best you can do. You control how much effort you put in on the practice field or in the meeting room. We focus on that. No matter what anybody thinks or says—it doesn't matter."

When you lose the Super Bowl, improving can only mean one thing.

The Pats' attitude will be tested this season. Big time. Super Bowl runner-ups don't have a great track record in the season after losing the big game. Most of the teams fall off the radar. In fact, seven out of the last 13 Super Bowl runner-ups have missed the playoffs entirely the following year. Step one in overcoming this history is to learn from your mistakes. The Pats have watched the tape of that Giants game on numerous occasions. They've taken their medicine and now want to turn the page.

"You always have emotions when watching it because you remember the disappointment you felt after the game," Brady said. "Just like when you watch games you've won, you remember the excitement you felt. It was one game last season that we all felt we could have played a little better. You can't change what happened, so what can you do? You can move forward with the awareness that you can improve. We're going to try to improve in all phases."

When you lose the Super Bowl, improving can only mean one thing: winning the Super Bowl. And that's what it's all about at Pats camp—and really what it's been about since they lost to the Giants. And when it comes to that type of focus, no one—maybe in the history of the game—does it better than Belichick.

"Our deal is what is in front of us," he said. "And what is behind us we can't do anything about. What is in front of us, we will get to it eventually, but right now we have a lot of other stuff we need to tackle and deal with."

The NFL is going to have to deal with an angry Patriots team this season. They set records last year, and there's no reason to believe they won't do it again. It's going to be fun, but they just have to win the last game. Then, and only then, New England can finally move on from what happened last year.

Now excuse me while I google flights to Tampa Bay. I can't wait until February. ✖✖✖

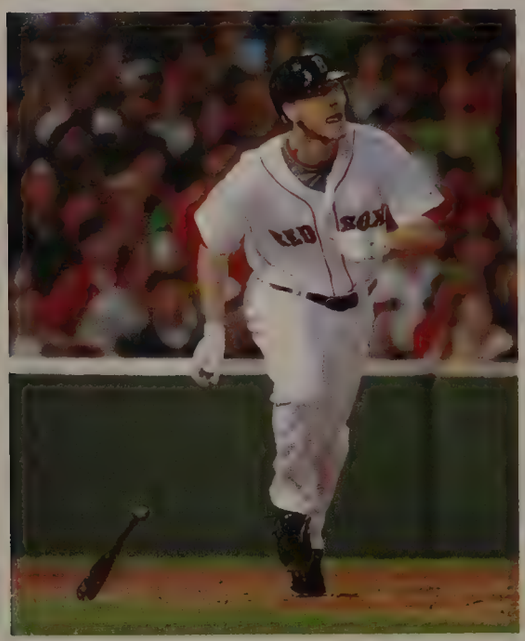
The School of Sports {RICH LEVINE}

ON THE TRADE, THE CELTICS, THE EIGHTH INNING AND FAVRE

5 BURNING STRETCH-RUN QUESTIONS



Can Jason Bay keep it going?
It's not uncommon for a player to get traded to Boston midseason and immediately raise his game—Butch Huskey and Gabe Kapler hit a combined .667 with four dongs in their first two games here. The key is doing it all year. So, while everyone's been quicker than a prom-night sexcapade to deem the Jason Bay trade a success, our jury's out until we see him in the playoffs.

Is Jed for real?
We know why Jacoby Ellsbury's been such a mess lately. Jed Lowrie stole his soul. Lowrie's about two weeks away from officially assuming Ellsbury's role from last year.... Unless the Sox make a Gagne-level mistake and replace him with a rehabilitated Julio Lugo. In that case, well, it'll be nice to have the Pats and C's to keep us busy in October.

How late will the Rays stay up?
We thought it was a forgone conclusion that Tampa would have soiled the bed by now. We understand how they're winning, just not how they're still winning.

How hurt is Joba?
Right now, the Yankees are like Chris Farley right before his death. They're still a talented force, but they're teetering on the edge. If Joba Chamberlain is out for any significant period of time, that's New York's four-day heroin-and-hooker binge. The end of Joba means the end of the 2008 Yankees.

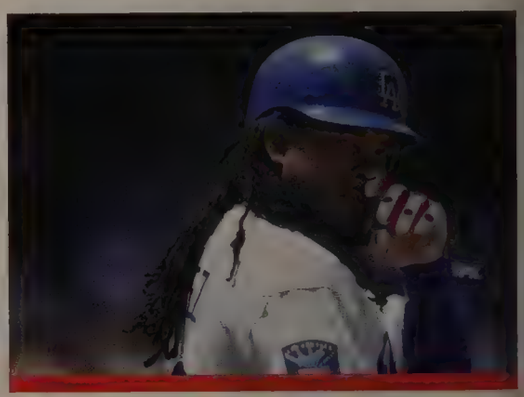
Who takes the eighth?
Papelbon can only make his magic happen if the Sox have the lead and that means securing the eighth inning. And while the bullpen has looked better of late, we're still searching for someone to man the set-up role. Our money's on Manny Delcarmen. If only to have the "Manny! Manny!" chant back at Fenway.

3 Forms of Post-Manny Stress Disorder

The Angry: "Good riddance! Manny's everything that's wrong with professional sports today. I don't even want him wearing a Red Sox hat in the Hall of Fame. His hat should have a picture of me punting him in the nuts!"

The Spurned: "I always stood up for him. It was OK that he watched his home runs. It was fine that he peed on things. And then he turns around and does this! Makes a mockery of the Red Sox.... Makes a mockery of me! How could I be so stupid?"

The Denial: Stroking a Manny bobblehead while wrapped in a blanket and rocking in a creaky chair in a damp basement, "Shhh... it's gonna be OK. They're just kidding. You're not gone. We'll be together again soon. Ooh, what's that Manny? You want me to hurt Theo? OK, OK..."



4 DATES TO WATCH

8/17 Dustin Pedroia turns 25 today—a fact that led us to discover that Pedroia is somehow only three weeks older than Jacoby Ellsbury. What's the verdict: Should this increase our appreciation of Dustin or decrease the hype surrounding Jacoby?

8/22 The Eagles and old friend Asante Samuel visit Foxborough for an exhibition game. Thanks to the Super Bowl, the Pats now have a foolproof strategy for keeping Samuel at bay—just float the ball directly into his hands.

8/24 It's time for the closing ceremonies at the Beijing Olympics, which means we can all stop watching NBC. At least until The Office and 30 Rock return.

8/26 The Sox head south for their last-ever regular-season series at Yankee Stadium. Tear. Here's a quick list of our favorite Stadium memories: 1. Game 7 of the 2004 ALCS. 2. Pedro's one-hitter. 3. July 4, 2003: Sox hit seven homers in a 10-3 win.

2 CELTICS SCHEDULE HIGHLIGHTS

Bring on the King... Boston opens the season at home against the Cavs in a game that, for some reason, reminds us of the 2004 NFL opener when the Pats hosted Indianapolis. Here's hoping this one plays out in a similar fashion for the hometown team—specifically, with Mike Vanderjagt missing a field goal as time expires.

Kobe's a Ho Ho Ho... The C's are back in prime time on Christmas Day—against the Lakers, no less—and we couldn't be more excited. The same excitement that will result in hundreds of Boston husbands and boyfriends "ruining" Christmas dinner and spending the night on the pullout with grandma. (Note: Let that be the last time we ever use the words "pullout" and "grandma" in the same sentence.)

1 ONE NEW MEDIA GUIDELINE

As of this week, a new federal law mandates that any and all sports coverage in the United States must include an opinion on Brett "The Jet" Favre. Failure to abide is punishable by gagging with a pair of game-used John Madden boxers. So, here it is: Brett Favre... is an ass.

"The Red Sox [are] my hobby. It's ridiculous. It's sad. And happy. It brings me great joy."

Soroff On MIKE O'MALLEY

The ubiquitous sports fan talks about Bob Barker, Catholic school and why the Red Sox rule.

Actor and comedian Mike O'Malley was born in Boston and raised in Nashua, N.H. Perhaps best known for his role on the CBS sitcom Yes, Dear, O'Malley began his TV career as host of the Nickelodeon game shows Get the Picture and Guts. He had a self-titled sitcom on NBC and starred in the series Life With Roger. His film credits include On Broadway, Leatherheads, 28 Days, Pushing Tin and The Perfect Man. Also an accomplished playwright, his work has been produced off-Broadway (his sister is a Broadway actress). A Boston sports fanatic, O'Malley has appeared in ESPN commercials as "The Rick"... a Boston sports fanatic. He has thrown the first pitch at Fenway and blogs about the Red Sox. He and his wife, Lisa, live with their three children in Los Angeles.

Jonathan Soroff: Biggest act of fandom?

Mike O'Malley: I pretty much neglect my family during the dinner hour because the games are on then in L.A. I pretty much watch every single Red Sox game during the season. I got on a plane to come to the 2004 World Series when my wife was two weeks away from having a baby. Fortunately, he wasn't born until Nov. 21, and I actually gave up tickets for the World Series because I had to be there for the little guy, but I'll undoubtedly hold that over his head for the rest of his life.

Is it true what they say about New Hampshire boys?
That we're all extremely fit? Yes. Just look at me.

There's a whole generation that thinks of you as a game show host. Bob Barker or Alex Trebek?
Neither. They never hosted a sports action game show, and I never wore a suit. Bob had the long Gene Rayburn mike, though. Gotta love that.

You went to the University of New Hampshire. How much dope did you smoke?
Surprisingly, I did not partake in that. I did imbibe quite a bit of alcohol as any good collegiate person does. We used to sneak kegs into the dorm in hockey bags.

You gave the commencement address. What advice did you give them?
Make and keep really great friends, because there's ups and downs, and they're the only thing that's going to sustain you.

You were in a film titled Deep Impact, which sounds like a porn movie...
[Laughs.] I was, and it wasn't. I played Elijah Wood's astronomy teacher, and I'm the only character who dies and no one cares.

Favorite porn star?
Do they have names? Just kidding. I'll go with Kim Basinger in 9½ Weeks.

One person you'd never ever want to see naked?
Well, I don't have mirrors in my house because I don't want to see myself.

Did Yes, Dear*'s Anthony Clark ever make you puke from laughing?*
He is absolutely knock-down, drag-out funny. He's one of the rare comedians who can laugh while telling his own jokes and still be funny.

Title film role you were born to play?
Marty. The remake. [Laughs.]

The Mike O'Malley Show... that lasted about five seconds.
Should have lasted, but people didn't know that Kate Wallace and Will Arnett were stars back then.

You made a movie with Heather Locklear and Hilary Duff. Any fantasies about tag-teaming them?
This is not an article my mother's going to read, is it? Ummm, I'm only human. The fact that you're asking that question is the answer.

Is John Cusack, your Pushing Tin costar, the most underrated actor of his generation?
He's a great guy, but I don't think he's underrated. People love him. He's been making movies since 16 Candles. How many of those guys are still making movies? Where's Molly Ringwald?

She's in France. On to Leatherheads. George Clooney: Sexiest man alive?
I'll say this: The guy is unbelievably nice. He works really hard. I never saw him on a Blackberry once. When you're talking to him, he looks right at you, not over your shoulder to see who's coming.

Who's more talented: You or your sister Kerry?
Oh, please, have you heard her sing? She went to the A.R.T. She is so unbelievable. She's been on Broadway. She's way more talented than me.

Would you rather be remembered as a playwright, a comedian or an actor?
If I had a play that was successful enough that people really dug it, definitely as a playwright. It's so much more of you. When you're an actor, people either like you or they don't. With a play, it's more like, "This is how I see life."

If you're "The Rick" and I tell you I don't give a crap about the Red Sox, the Patriots, the Celtics or the Bruins, what would you say?
If I'm "The Rick," I'd say, "Ummm. That's sad, because you're really missing out on something that could change your life in a major way. Sports is real."

You blog about the Red Sox. Aren't all bloggers geeks?
Yes. Well, define geek. Maybe they're more like tools. Seriously, all bloggers are fans of something, so they're geeks in that this is their hobby. The Red Sox [are] my hobby. I place an incredible amount of time, energy and effort into something I have no influence on. It's ridiculous. It's sad. And happy. It brings me great joy.

You went to Catholic school. Were you beaten regularly?
No. Sister Irmalita was the only one who was a little angry. But I'd be angry if my parents named me Irmalita, too. She looked like a cross between HR Pufnstuf and Leonid Brezhnev.

If you were a priest, what do you think I'd have to confess?
You probably feel bad about something you wrote about somebody. Or a regret about a comment you made because you're quick-witted but probably said something that someone misunderstood.

Story of my life. Will you be my shrink?
You can't afford me. ×××

Every wicked cool fact that's fit to print

By Nancy Gaines

JUST GOT TO TOWN, BUT CAN'T FIND THE water in the Back Bay? See no quaint baseball park on the Fenway? Finally understand the joke about where to pahk the cah in Hahvad Yahd? (Nowhere, chuckles: It's grass.)

If you actually wanted to pahk, you might have tried Hahvad Square—which hasn't been square since the 17th century. (While yes, Boston Common really does have five sides.) This is a city where blue movies became the law of the land, but blue laws—atavistic moral codes like not selling booze or working on Sundays—remain on the books, though not always enforced.

Fear not, newcomer. You, too, can become an instant Bostonian.

Here are 100 assorted trinkets of information on how to walk, talk, drive and (for bonus points) quarrel like a townie. With the help of a little cultural intelligence and a dose of demystification, you can master a city laid out on cow paths and founded by rebels with a cause.

The accent? That's your problem.

A Brief History of Boston

Memorize. There will be a quiz.

1. 1620: Pilgrims arrive. Clear land, plant pumpkins, kill American Indians, later burn witches.
2. 1636: Harvard happens. Shit follows.
3. 1776: Bright idea hits Sam Adams (the man, not the beer) and other Boston hotheads: Boot Brits, steal fruited plains, prepare for world domination.
4. 1840: Irish arrive. Can't get work; elect selves mayor, governor, eventually president (see below).
5. 1858: Proper Bostonian Oliver Wendell Holmes, in fit of irrational exuberance, dubs city "Hub of the Solar System." Countless Parisians, Londoners, New Yorkers snicker.
6. 1863: Proper Bostonian Edward Everett delivers long-winded two-hour oration on fallen heroes at Gettysburg, eclipsed by pithy address by guy named Lincoln.
7. 1947: Original Improper Bostonian James Michael Curley wins fourth term as Hub mayor, enters federal pen for mail fraud but somehow stays in office.
8. 1960: John F. Kennedy becomes president, inspires numerous pretenders (Michael Dukakis, kid brother Ted Kennedy, John Kerry); they all fail.
9. 2004: Having taught town how to dress, dance, etc., Mass. gays win dubious right to wed, divorce, pay alimony.

Must Monikers

Nicknames and aliases you need to know in a pinch.

1. THE RAZOR
   Gillette Stadium, where the fabled Patriots play.

Memorable depictions, for better and for worse.

1. The Last Hurrah: Spencer Tracy turns James Michael Curley into Blarney Rubble.
2. The Verdict: Screenplay by Mamet, direction by Lumet and acting by Newman nail town's zeitgeist, if not the accent.
3. The Friends of Eddie Coyle: George V. Higgins novel, Robert Mitchum and Peter Boyle capture the accent and the underworld; The Departed finishes distant second.
4. Good Will Hunting: Weird name for a movie, but made Ben, Matt, Casey, L Street Tavern stars.
5. Mystic River: From Dorchester-bred Dennis Lehane's book, a deep, dark swim in local underclass unconsciousness.

8. Spenser: For Hire: Cambridge's Robert Parker created a made-for-TV hero.
9. Boston Legal: Belmont's David E. Kelley made The Practice perfect.

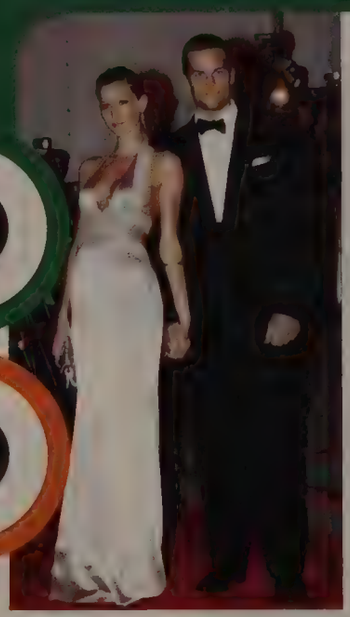
Dirty Little Secrets

Read them, then lock them away.

1. Say it ain't so: Chicago "Black Sox" players hatched nefarious scheme to throw 1919 World Series while staying at Buckminster Hotel in Kenmore Square.
2. Joe Kennedy, JFK's father, served as ambassador to Great Britain, had soft spot for Hitler, advised FDR to sit out WWII.
3. Under benighted stewardship of Southern plantation owner Tom Yawkey, the Red Sox became last American League team to field a black ball player.
4. Boston rock anthem "Dirty Water," including lyrics "Boston, you're my home," actually penned and performed by L.A. group the Standells.
5. Sssshhh... the New England Patriots have been accused of cheating.



Skeletons in the Closet

The black sheep in our family.

1. Charles Ponzi
   Operating from School Street office, Italian immigrant invented ingenious scheme used to swindle millions from local suckers.
2. James "Whitey" Bulger
   Ranks just behind Osama bin Laden on FBI Most Wanted list: ruled underworld for quarter century, protected by rogue FBI agents. (See Jack Nicholson in The Departed.)
3. Albert DeSalvo, aka The Boston Strangler
   Killed 13 women between 1962 and 1964. Maybe.
4. Charles Stuart
   Newbury Street furrier blamed black gunman for fatal shooting of his pregnant wife; took dive off Tobin Bridge after alibi unraveled.
5. Neil Entwistle
   Depraved, porn-addled Brit went Stuart one better: blamed wife for shooting baby daughter, self; now serving life.
6. Curse of the Bambino
   Ask your roommate from New York.

Power-brokers

Mayors, governors: They come and go. These players hold the keys to the kingdom.

1. Ted Kennedy
   Liberal lion is battling cancer, but still a kingmaker. His Obama endorsement was kiss of death for Hillary.
2. John Henry, Tom Werner, Larry Lucchino
   The triumvirate that rule Red Sox Nation.
3. Ned Johnson
   Head of Fidelity—firm manages more than a trillion dollars, including your parents' retirement fund, your best friend's trust fund, your 401k.
4. Abigail Johnson
   His daughter. Enough said.
5. Anne Finucane
   She's the face, voice, balls of Bank of America in Boston.
6. Marty Baron
   The Boston Globe editor: even in decline, paper sets local agenda.
7. Cleve Killingsworth
   CEO of Blue Cross/Blue Shield. Decides how much you pay and what your doctor/hospital can charge.
8. Tom Brady
   Patriots quarterback. He goes home to Gisele, you don't.

The Getaways

Former homeys, now big-profit prophets honored in any land.

1. Sheldon Adelson
   From hawking trade shows in Framingham to Las Vegas casino kingpin and third richest person in United States.
2. Michael Bloomberg
   From Meffa (aka Medford, working-class Boston suburb) to biz billionaire, top of the heap, king of the hill in Gotham.
3. Sumner Redstone
   From owner of suburban movie theater chain to head of media giant Viacom, worth about a zillion dollars; will find way to take it with him.

Crash Course in Getting Around

Cursing is encouraged.

1. Downtown Crossing: Not downtown (which, more accurately, is called the Financial District) nor a definitive crossing, but a cheesy shopping area of Washington Street.
2. Boston Common: Includes the Frog Pond, bandstand, winos and Park Street T—and is across Charles Street from the...
3. Public Garden: With its flowers, ducklings, statues and swan boats—which has nothing to do with...
4. Boston Garden: Which is where the Celts and Bruins play, no matter who owns it and what it's renamed.
5. Commonwealth Mall: Sounds like a place to shop, but, no, that would be Downtown Crossing, which sounds like a place to stroll, which is—ta da!—what you do on the Mall.
6. Roxbury/West Roxbury: Not to be confused, the former is a mostly black neighborhood in city's center, the latter mostly Irish Catholic families on suburban outskirts.
7. Leather District: Next to South Station, where once shoe, coat and purse makers existed, now lofts, condos and bistros.
8. Copley: Pronounced like cop not cope, Copley Square (and its T station) is famous for Trinity Church and the Fairmont Copley Plaza hotel but two blocks from the Copley Square Hotel, which is across the street from Copley Place, which is, of course, not a street but a mall. As in shopping.
9. Ignore Your Compass: The North End is southwest of East Boston; South Boston is northeast of the South End.

LOCAL LORE

Learn these factoids for new bar games and to shut up smart-ass natives.

1. Ted Williams' seat: A red chair in the bleachers at Fenway marks what they say was the Splendid Splinter's longest homer. Most honored seat in the house.
2. Smoots: A way to measure Harvard Bridge, devised in 1958 by wacky MIT frat boys, who laid a brother named Oliver Smoot end to end across the span.
3. Combat Zone: An incredible shrinking stretch of downtown strip bars and girlie shows, named for the GIs on leave in the '40s who got into fights there.
4. Dirty movies: In 1967, Boston banned a Swedish porn flick, but lost the case at U.S. Supreme Court to set precedent allowing porn.
5. Pesky Pole: Right-field foul pole at Fenway that, in the '40s, light-hitting shortstop Johnny Pesky could reach. At 88, Pesky is still on Sox staff but prefers going to the opposite field.
6. Censor: Until 1982, the City of Boston had an official Censor, aptly named Dick Sinnott.

Mothers & Fathers of Invention

Cool stuff that got started in Boston.

1. Tel & Tel

Phone credited to Alexander Graham Bell, though evidence suggests he stole the idea, fair and square; wireless invented in 1901 by Marconi, not Motorola.

2. Safety razor

Invented by traveling salesman King Gillette.

3. Frozen food

Invented by Clarence Birdseye in Gloucester.

4. Mutual fund

Credited to Edward C. Johnson II, father of Fidelity chairman Ned Johnson.

5. World Wide Web

Invented by former MIT prof Tim Berners-Lee.

6. Fried clams

Invented by accident at Woodman's in Essex.

7. Gourmet cuisine

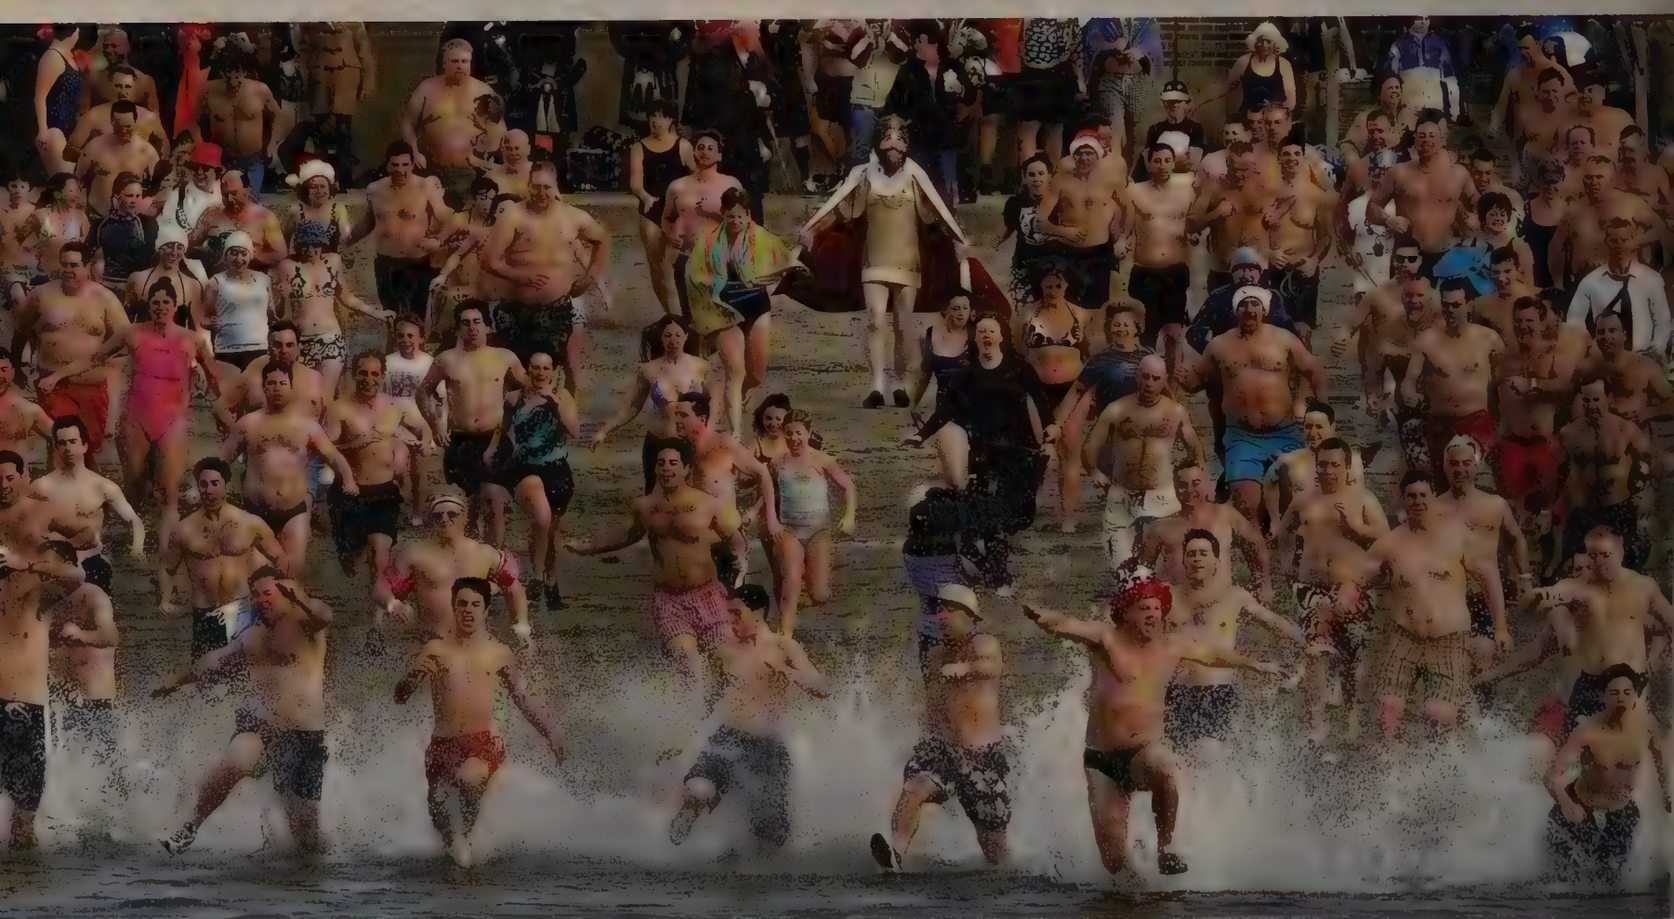
Though she didn't invent it, no one did more to popularize it than Julia Child and her Boston-based TV show The French Chef.

8. Public relations

Edward Bernays—nephew of Freud, father of novelist Anne—coined term, invented spin, later flayed alive (but we exaggerate).

A MARATHON, NOT A SPRINT

Bill Brett chronicles a year in the city.



BY JONATHAN SOROFF PHOTOGRAPHS BY BILL BRETT

CERTAIN PHOTOGRAPHERS are as famous as the subjects they shoot: Annie Leibovitz, Richard Avedon, Irving Penn, Man Ray, Weegee. In this town, it's Bill Brett (and mind you: This is a city that for periods of his life, Yousuf Karsh called home).

A 40-year veteran of The Boston Globe, Brett has covered everything from hard news to the social scene, and he's that rare shutterbug whom both publicity-shy and attention-starved socialites pose for, hoping to have their mugs show up in his column.

In 2005, Brett released his first book, Boston, All One Family—a collection of portraits of notable Bostonians. It proved so successful that he followed it up in 2007 with Boston, an Extended Family. However, this Labor Day, he'll release his most ambitious project: Boston, a Year in the Life. From Marathon Day '07 to Marathon Day '08, he captured one iconic image per day, shooting more than 30,000 frames.

"I couldn't leave town or take a vacation or get sick," he says. "I did have a Plan B in the event that I did, but thankfully I didn't. The reason I picked the Marathon as the start and end point is that the whole project was a photographic marathon."

He certainly covered all 26 miles, and the result, as philanthropist (and Brett's dear friend) David Mugar points out in the foreword, is Brett's "gift to the city." There are, of course, celebrity photographs: Ben Affleck, Jennifer Garner, Bill Cosby, Keith Lockhart and the only known photo taken in Boston of Tom Brady and Gisele Bundchen together. There are the quintessential Boston shots: the 4th of July on the Esplanade, Yawkey Way during the World Series, a Boston Ballet rehearsal, Haymarket and the jubilant crowd outside the State House after the anti-gay marriage amendment was voted down. But some of the most memorable and moving are more prosaic: the Liars Club of retired firefighters, a woman sweeping her street in Bay Village.

"Some days, I thought I was all set, and others, I had to go back out at 11 at night."

Brett's favorite? "Probably the opening day of Camp Harbor View [a day camp for inner-city kids]. I got a shot of [founders] Jack Connors and John Fish sitting at a picnic table. I was just so impressed by what they'd accomplished."

As for how he knew where to be and when, he relied on his vast network of contacts: the papers, the State House news service, AP wires and friends (including the mayor) who occasionally dropped a dime.

"Some days, I thought I was all set, and others, I had to go back out at 11 at night."

One such night happened in February, when he got soaked to the bone standing on Storrow Drive to capture cars making their way through a storm. It was well worth it. The true value of his images may not be obvious today and will probably only be realized by future generations, who will view him as a historian.

"I learned so much," he says, in typical self-deprecating style. "I did a lot of it by foot, and even though I've lived here my whole life, I learned a lot about the neighborhoods and how they're changing."

He points to a photo of men in drag emerging from the water at Carson Beach in Southie. "Twenty-five years ago, they'd all be arrested. That's how far we've come."

As far as we know, no one has ever attempted such a photographic chronicle. Summing up the experience, he says, "The year went by so fast, but some of the days were slow."

Work

The self-proclaimed "sassy sophisticate" keeps it simple for work and chooses pieces that easily go from day to night.

"For flats I love patterns and colors because I can't cross the line too much, so I err on the conservative side—but shoes can complete the entire outfit."

Manolo Blahnik Lee Suede leopard flats, $495 at Neiman Marcus, Copley Place, Boston (617-536-3660) neimanmarcus.com

"Diane von Furstenberg—if I could have all my clothes from her I would. They're perfect for work and play. And nine months out of the year I'm in dresses."

Diane von Furstenberg Ruffled Wrap Dress, $365 at Neiman Marcus, Copley Place, Boston (617-536-3660) neimanmarcus.com

"I enjoy the look of big bags, plus for me they are more practical. Out in the field I need to carry a lot of stuff, so a small bag just won't do."

Foley + Corinna The Rambler Bag, $595 at Luna Boston, 205 Newbury St., Boston (866-910-3900) lunaboston.com

SHAYNA SEYMOUR LEFT the fashion world six years ago for something more. "I had such an interest in journalism and TV. I was at the point where I was going to do something or stop talking about it." So Seymour went to grad school, then landed her first broadcast job. Now 32 and a producer/reporter for WCVB-TV's Chronicle, the Mass. native searches for the newsworthy and considers style a hobby—albeit a serious hobby. In an industry where dreary skirt suits are a frequent offense, the former GAP Inc. merchandiser is determined to bring her closet's finest to the screen. She's got a lot to choose from, but owning the clothes is half the battle. The rest is figuring out what the camera likes.

.95 carat diamond studs, $3,600 at Lux Bond & Green, 416 Boylston St., Boston (617-266-4747) lbgreen.com

"Dress code varies by assignment—whether the reporter is interviewing the governor or strolling a country road or covering a harder news story. Simple well-tailored professional clothing that does not distract from the story works best. Plus, an outfit that could be easily dressed up or dressed down with a jacket or understated accessories is preferable."
—Erin Duggan, media relations manager for WCVB-TV

It occurs to me, as we're browsing through her favorite Boston boutique, Calypso, that if Seymour were a fashion superhero, she'd be the one who can pull off any color. No hue too impossible. She tries to convince me otherwise with an arm full of daring electric yellows, hot pinks and oranges.

"For my complexion bold colors look the best, and I learned that the hard way—pastels are awful. Plums, purples, deep blues, red and yellow. I'm all about the pop!" she admits. Besides the issue of shade, she has to nix anything in her wardrobe that could distract from the story, which means no zigzags, busy prints or loud jewelry. "When I first started I bought this seersucker suit, and I was so excited because it was so New England. But the lines were going crazy on camera, and my news director said, 'You can't ever wear that again!'"
Sounds harsh, but Seymour's learned what works on and off screen, which makes shopping much easier. She swears by Anthropologie, Club Monaco and J.Crew for the perfect-work-to-play finds, and targets Barneys Co-op and Zara when she wants the most for her money. "I need to keep my wardrobe fresh. So I'm always looking for that great steal—that hidden gem."

Undoubtedly, her killer outfits make for great TV—in HD, no less. "When I worked in the fashion industry, I was expected to look fashionable everyday. It was part of the job—think Devil Wears Prada," she says. "In that industry 'fashion sense' establishes credibility. However, in the journalism world, my skills and credibility are not based on how I dress. Fashion is an added bonus and represents a piece of my personality."

Play

When she's not in front of the camera, Seymour keeps it fun, casual and colorful.

"These are my new favorites. I wear them all the time."

Mystique Suede Turquoise Thong Sandal, $150 at Intermix, 186 Newbury St., Boston (617-236-5172) intermixonline.com

"This short-sleeved blouse is a win-win. You can dress it up or down. And the pom-poms down the front add personality."

Nicole Miller Collection Magenta Pom Top, $300 at Twilight, 12 Fleet St., Boston (617-523-8008)

"I prefer skinny leg to wide leg, because I always feel like I look awkward [in wide]. When [skinny] first became popular, I thought, 'No way, I can't do that.' And then I fell in love."

J Brand 12" Pencil Jean with zipper detail, $164 at In-jean-ius, 441 Hanover St., Boston (617-523-5326) injeanius.com

"I go to J.Crew for my basics [like] a simple, clean cardigan. The crystal bling buttons add a bit of sass."

Crystal-Button Bird's-Eye Cardigan, $118 at J.Crew, Copley Place, Boston (617-236-5950) jcrew.com

"My favorite shoes—and I don't care—are my Uggs! I drive in them and keep them in my car."

Ugg Australia Classic Short boots, $169 at the Tannery, 39 Brattle St., Cambridge (617-491-1811) thetannery.com

"One explanation—Halloween."

"Birthday girls wear red shades. Even at an early age, I loved my dresses. Patent-leather Mary Janes were all the rage!"

"With my older brother, Alex. I've always been into bold prints. Red to this day is my favorite color."

"I used to be able to pull off accessories so well. I struggle in this area now."

"Got to love a comfy tracksuit."

"Hot stuff—sophomore year in high school. Loved my hoops and red lipstick. Wow! But check out the eyebrows. Yikes!"

"Miss Morehouse College 1997–98. A heavy makeup phase, but a great accessory. I got to wear a tiara!"

Blame It on Theo

THE AXE EFFECT

The names Theo Epstein and Peter Gammons can open a lot of doors in this town. They can open a lot of wallets, too, which is why the Hot Stove, Cool Music series of charity events have been such a success (frequent guest appearances by Red Sox players don't hurt, either). This summer, Epstein and Gammons, whose band plays at the concert, host Rock and Roll Hall of Fame inductee Buddy Guy and sizzling-guitar practitioners George Thorogood and the Destroyers. A chunk of the proceeds benefit Theo and Paul Epstein's nonprofit agency for disadvantaged youth in the Greater Boston area, Foundation to Be Named Later. Which, of course, has already been named. The Improper is also a sponsor.

Mess for Success

Men in Blue I didn't know what the "poncho section" actually meant until I had a replica of my mom's Thanksgiving Jell-O mold lying on my lap. Always creative, and occasionally messy, the Blue Man Group is a must for any newcomer. This multimedia romp combines comedy, movement and dance—with a dash of marshmallow and a splash of paint. Their regular show at the Charles Street Playhouse will keep you on your toes, even if you're bogged down with the remnants of the infamous paper finale. You might want to wear the poncho, though.

The Dark Knight ★★★ ½ Astoundingly ambitious, The Dark Knight is summer blockbuster as dialectical exercise. It's a philosophical debate among agents of order and chaos, punctuated with the spectacle of a depressed billionaire in flying-rodent drag beating up a psychotic clown. Preoccupied, as most of us have been for the past seven years, with how far one must go to combat an inexplicable enemy, the film wrestles with so many meaty ideas and timely concerns, you can't quite wrap your head around it all in just one viewing. As the Joker, Heath Ledger's final completed performance is the sort of roiling, balls-to-the-wall turn from which legends are made. And director Christopher Nolan ruthlessly whittles every interaction down to the barest of essentials. Yet, he cuts so quickly in and out of scenes we hardly have time to absorb vital information. The film might be too aggressive and propulsive for its own good. It's about a half-hour of breathing room away from the masterpiece it yearns to be. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Encounters at the End of the World ★★★ After 40-odd years and 50-something films, Werner Herzog has investigated almost every obscure corner of the globe, so naturally his latest masterpiece sends him all the way to Antarctica. Turning his inquisitive gaze and persnickety voice-over narration on the residents of McMurdo Station, a tacky American outpost "complete with abominations like yoga classes," Herzog salutes the vagabond spirits exploring the bottom edge of the map. The director's voracious sampling of their research conjures a thriving ecosystem. We hear seals wailing what sound like Pink Floyd solos and savor some jaw-dropping underwater photography (by frequent Herzog collaborator Henry Kaiser), before finally standing on the edge of an active volcano. The title is double-edged, as all involved take a dim view of the planet's long-term prospects. But somehow Herzog's reverence for every last sign of life feels weirdly joyous and hopeful. This movie is an astounding, eye-opening experience. (At Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

Get Smart ★★ Missed it by that much. This isn't a half-bad comedy for about 40 minutes, but then the fool thing degenerates into a crummy, lugubrious action flick. A throwback not to Mel Brooks and Buck Henry's '60s TV staple, the latest misadventure of bumbling Agent 86 is more akin to lousy '80s capers like Spies Like Us, tossing aside promising comedic shenanigans in favor of bloated, overwrought chase sequences and boring pyrotechnics. Steve Carell provides a kinder, gentler take on Don Adams' undercover numbskull, playing nicely off of Anne Hathaway's too-young but competent Agent 99. Dwayne Johnson works a delightful self-deprecating goof on his former Rock persona, while the peerless Alan Arkin bats cleanup as their beleaguered boss. Sadly, director Peter Segal, who recently helmed the terrible remake of The Longest Yard, has no faith in his cast's comic prowess and throws the entire picture over to tedious shoot-outs and vehicular pandemonium. Sorry about that, chief. (In the suburbs.)

Gonzo: The Life and Work of Dr. Hunter S. Thompson ★★ This disappointing hagiography comes from documentarian Alex Gibney, who honed his craft with current events flicks like last year's Oscar-winner Taxi to the Dark Side. Gibney never finds a convincing angle on the pioneering journalist's life story, leaping backwards from Thompson's 2005 suicide to his groundbreaking books before spending most of the running time on the author's indelible dispatches from the 1972 campaign trail, work that arguably changed the form of political reporting forever. The movie is packed with archival footage, most of it freely sampled from previous documentaries already familiar to Thompson aficionados. The film doesn't examine the author's self-destructive tendencies. Alcoholism, drug addiction and violent outbursts are presented as cute, often buried beneath glowing testimonials by everybody from George McGovern to Pat Buchanan. The movie makes an unconvincing case for its subject's continued relevance in his final years, conveniently ignoring that Thompson's writing had lapsed into stagnant self-parody. (At Coolidge Corner.)

Hancock ★★ ½ Will Smith stars as the title character, a drunken amnesiac superhero who flies around downtown Los Angeles fighting crime while wasted and knocks over a lot of expensive stuff. Like buildings. Hancock's such a shambling wreck, he can't even take flight without leaving massive divots in the street beneath him, which in this litigious day and age naturally makes him the plaintiff in a ton of property damage suits. So far, so funny, and as director Peter Berg's pricey blockbuster is content being Bad Santa with superpowers, the movie zings. Alas, Hancock pivots on one game-changing plot-twist that makes it impossible for me to discuss anything further. The movie jumps clear off the rails, going all kerflooey in ways everybody can nitpick, but only a bastard would tell. It's too bad, as the movie marks another impressive attempt by Smith to

HOT AND BOTHERED

Woody Allen does pain in Spain with Vicky Cristina Barcelona.

Vicky Cristina Barcelona
★★½
Starring Javier Bardem, Scarlett Johansson, Penélope Cruz, Rebecca Hall, Chris Messina and Patricia Clarkson. Written and directed by Woody Allen. At Coolidge Corner, Kendall Square and Waltham Embassy.

Victor Bello

LIKE TAX SEASON AND crummy weather, Woody Allen's latest movies inevitably arrive to inspire glum feelings of resignation. At this point, it's hard to remember that faraway era when he was my favorite filmmaker, and I'd spend days cajoling my dad into taking me to see Allen's latest opus at long-gone theaters like the Janus, Pi Alley, or even the dreaded Copley.

Say what you will about the 72-year-old filmmaker, but he's got a hell of a work ethic. With a handful of bona fide classics like Annie Hall, Manhattan and Husbands and Wives, most would be content to rest on their impressive laurels. But Allen is still grinding out movies at a relentless pace (whether their scripts are ready or not). These days when he's stuck, he'll just recycle an older idea, strip-mining Crimes and Misdemeanors for Match Point, and again for this past January's Cassandra's Dream. Sometimes Allen barely seems engaged with his material, shooting scenes in static long-shots and letting his

So it comes as a bit of a surprise that Vicky Cristina Barcelona is a pleasant trifle. Sure, it's problematic and sloppy, but compared with Woody Allen movies, this is probably his most consistent effort since 1999's loopy La Strada remake, Sweet and Lowdown.

Rebecca Hall and Scarlett Johansson star as Vicky and Cristina, two young American post-grads spending a summer in Spain. Like most of Allen's female characters, they're lovely abstractions. Vicky's the sharp, no-nonsense brunette engaged to a dullard Manhattan businessman (Chris Messina). Cristina is the reckless, sensual blonde, hungry for art and experience and desperately seeking direction in life.

The film marks Woody Allen's third collaboration with Johansson, and he finally seems to have figured out how to use her. Too often forced to play headstrong roles, there's still something vague and unformed about Johansson as a performer, a sense of confused yearning that suits Cristina perfectly.

Enter Javier Bardem's Juan Antonio, a free-spirited, Latin-lover stereotype who probably would be risible if played by another actor. Apparently exorcising all the demons summoned by his legendary turn as an angel of death in No Country for Old Men, Bardem delivers his loosest performance yet, embracing the role's mildewed clichés with a wink and a smile. He first meets Vicky and Cristina at a crowded restaurant, where he promptly suggests a threesome without a trace of lasciviousness, just a happy-go-lucky twinkle in his eyes.

Romantic entanglements ensue, complicated by stomach ulcers, girl-girl crushes and foolhardy rushes to the altar. The biggest stumbling block, however, is Juan Antonio's ex-wife, Maria Elena, a shrieking, emotional banshee played with manic gusto by Penélope Cruz. She's so erratic, she'll casually admit to plotting Johansson's murder before eagerly making out with her a few days later.

There's something charmingly retro about this lusty travelogue and the way it discreetly treats these couplings by never crossing the line into dirty-old-man territory. Allen's direction, with a generous assist from cinematographer Javier Aguirresarobe, is perkier and more alert than his recent standard. He even moves the camera once in a while, soaking up the beautiful Barcelona scenery when not gazing on his impossibly good-looking cast.

But even in such a happy, horny piece, Allen's trademark pessimism can't help but cast clouds over the sunshine. Patricia Clarkson turns up as a sad-eyed rich woman trapped in a loveless marriage, her life a vision of Vicky's fate, and soon even the sensual, free-spirited Bohemians lose their luster. Leave it to Allen to make a depressing sex fantasy.

Like most of his screenplays over the past decade, Vicky Cristina Barcelona never gets particularly close to its characters. They feel more like writerly concepts than individuals. This time around, Allen also employs third-person narration, read by Christopher Evan Welch, to comment dispassionately upon the action and thankfully handle the laborious exposition that otherwise would have been awkwardly mouthed by the actors. It's an obvious shortcut, but one that allows us to view these characters with the same clinical distance as their aloof author, which makes the film go down a lot smoother than Allen's recent work. It's hardly a return to form, but it'll do. ✖✖✖ push the boundaries of his affable screen persona. (At Boston Common and in the suburbs.)

Hellboy II: The Golden Army ★★ ½ There's no shortage of fanciful creatures in director Guillermo Del Toro's sequel to his modest 2004 adaptation of Mike Mignola's comic book. Once again following Ron Perlman's crabby, cigar-smoking demon-spawn on another mission to save humankind from the malevolent whims of the netherworld, this visually extravagant sequel is so densely packed with monsters it sometimes feels like the cantina scene from Star Wars dragged out to feature length. If only the story, by Del Toro and Mignola, were half as sophisticated as the production design. There's too much sitcom squabbling from Perlman and his flammable squeeze (Selma Blair) as a huge ensemble cast jockeys for screen time. Del Toro has a contagious affinity for his misfits and weirdos, and the movie's highlight finds a heartbroken Hellboy and his fishy sidekick Abe having a drunken Barry Manilow sing-along. But the stakes feel all too low, with too many jokey digressions, leading to a fatal lack of urgency in the overly bombastic, effects-laden third act. (At Boston Common and in the suburbs.)

Iron Man ★★★ "I'm not really the hero type," quips Robert Downey Jr. with a glint in his eye, helpfully summing up this picture's off-kilter appeal in a nifty nutshell. The movie itself is well-assembled, fairly standard stuff, and there's not a plot point that won't feel familiar if you've sat through any of the billion or so comic book adaptations released in the past 10 years. Yet, somehow, Downey's snarky presence in the lead makes it seem like a wonderful act of subversion. According to formula, Iron Man winds up playing it safe and hitting all the expected, crowd-pleasing beats, but the movie works best if you consider it as an outsized chronicle of its star's own recent redemption—one of those weird pop culture artifacts in which actors comment upon themselves and their careers. Like Lindsay Lohan's I Know Who Killed Me, except not horrible. (In the suburbs.)

The Last Mistress ★★★ Talk about a match made in heaven. First we've got French feminist provocateur Catherine Breillat, director of lurid, Rorschach-tests such as Romance and Fat Girl. Breillat was probably destined to team up with Asia Argento, a carnal, fearless actress who has proven in films like Scarlet Diva and The Heart Is Deceitful Above All Things that she has no concept of boundaries. The shocker here is that, for a healthy chunk of its running time, The Last Mistress is deceptively tasteful, beginning as a refined, 19th-century costume drama about an aspiring aristocrat (Fu'ad Ait Aattou) negotiating to marry a virginal beauty (Roxane Mesquida). But watch out once Argento shows up as Aattou's ferocious Spanish mistress. Their entanglement is a sexually charged doom-spiral, one made fascinating by Argento's wailing, unhinged performance. She's a literal bloodsucker, grunting and writhing her way through scenes to spellbinding effect. (At Kendall Square and Waltham Embassy.)

Man on Wire ★★★ ½ Funny how the most exciting heist picture in ages turns out to be a documentary. Director James Marsh's artfully crafted, edge-of-your-seat adventure tells the tale of tightrope walker Philipe Petit, who one morning in 1974 danced on a high-wire between the World Trade Center's Twin Towers. Combining hyperbolically shot reenactments and stunning archival footage with the gregarious reminiscences of Petit and his band of coconspirators, Marsh lays out the elaborate break-in with the snap precision and cinematic verve of a Danny Ocean caper. All the more poignant for never once mentioning 9/11, the movie uses old photographs to let the majestic towers speak for themselves, which lends Man On Wire a shade of sorrow the filmmaker is wise enough not to push. Petit is a florid and quixotic interview subject perfectly in sync with the film's evocation of the anything-goes paradise that was New York City in the 1970s. The breathtaking climax triggers many contradictory emotions as Petit's stunt was so reckless, so foolish and so magical. (At Kendall Square.)

Pineapple Express ★★★ Cheech and Chong meets Tango and Cash in this zonked riff on Reagan-era buddy comedies from the Superbad writing team of Seth Rogen and Evan Goldberg. Rogen stars as a slacker process server who accidentally stumbles into a crooked-cop drug war. Seeking refuge at the pad of his gleefully addled pot dealer (a revelatory James Franco), Rogen is mistaken for a world-class hitman, which prompts all sorts of wild car chases and narrow escapes for these two gloriously inept heroes. Directed by art-house favorite David Gordon Green, Pineapple Express has a grand time goofing on 1980s action-movie iconography, even boasting a brand-new theme song by Huey Lewis and the News! The kick here is watching familiar formulas subverted because our protagonists are baked out of their skulls. Like most Judd Apatow productions, this one's a bit too willing to follow the performers along improvised tangents, but a fundamental sweetness carries the day. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Sex and the City ★ ½ A telling early shot finds Sarah Jessica Parker and friends with their noses smushed up against the display case of a $50,000 diamond ring, thus setting the tone for the following 135 minutes of covetous consumption. With five costume changes, even the opening credits are a parade of product placements. Calling the film light on plot would be generous. Carrie and Miranda are treated shabbily by longtime loves, so they spend an entire calendar year ignoring apologies and wallowing in self-pity while Charlotte and Samantha drop by for drinks. Meanwhile, there are fashions, labels and lavish living spaces. Luxury porn and brand-name loyalty haven't been this fetishized since American Psycho. Inexplicably longer than Letters From Iwo Jima, Sex and the City leaves you feeling sorry for these shallow women and their empty, avaricious lives. (At Harvard Square in the suburbs.)

The Wackness ★★★ This wistful nostalgia piece is set in the summer of 1994 during the waning days of New York City's funky bohemian rot, right as Giuliani started turning Manhattan into an antiseptic playground for billionaires. Former Nickelodeon star Josh Peck comes of age as a melancholy teenage weed dealer, working Washington Square Park and falling hard for Olivia Thirlby's bored little rich girl. But the film is stolen outright by Ben Kingsley playing her dysfunctional stepdad, a regular customer of Peck's who's hell-bent on turning his midlife crisis into a rowdy second childhood. Kingsley's natural tendencies towards hammy overacting are for once justified, as his character constantly ingests massive amounts of drugs. Often reminiscent of American Beauty, only absent the holier-than-thou moralizing, this sweet and evocative effort from writer/director Jonathan Levine never quite transcends the clichés of the "summer that changed my life" template. But where else can you watch a doped up Gandhi hooking up with Mary-Kate Olsen? (At Coolidge Corner and Kendall Square.)

Wall-E ★★★★ Here's one for the ages. The crowning achievement from Pixar Animation Studios depicts a ruined Earth, some seven hundred years in the future, where a lonely trash compactor sorts his way through mountains of garbage, his only friend a remarkably resilient cockroach. Owing more to Charlie Chaplin than Bugs Bunny, the staggering early reels of Wall-E are devoid of any dialogue, working in a language of pure visual expression and brilliant soundscapes by Star Wars guru Ben Burtt. The lovesick travails of our adorable title character are as moving as any movie I've seen. In the second half, director Andrew Stanton switches gears into a less lyrical, more aggressively satirical mode, and introduces us to a future of overfed coach potatoes stranded in space after wrecking our planet. It's a pretty savage social commentary, but I was more interested in Wall-E and Eve, his shiny iPod-looking babe who packs a mean phaser and enlists a cuckoo's nest of malfunctioning robots to help save us all from bad programming. It's an instant classic. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Wanted ★★★ ½ This rude, ultra-violent delight is an R-rated Harry Potter for sexually frustrated cubicle drones. Or maybe it's The Matrix but with a sick sense of humor. Either way, it's nuts. James

McAvoy stars as a cuckolded office nebbish swept up into an ancient guild of supernaturally skilled assassins; after a bit of bloody training, the boy learns how to curve bullets with his mind. Taking orders from a sentient weaving loom (seriously), this crazy cabal of gunsmiths run gorgeously amok, driving cars on top of buses, knocking trains off their tracks and ducking zig-zag sniper fire. And then the exploding rats show up. Director Timur Bekmambetov discovers at least three dozen new ways to show a bullet ripping through a skull, but his best special effect is costar Angelina Jolie, who delivers a droll, nearly silent performance that's all dirty smirks and sex appeal. Wanted is bonkers, tasteless and morally questionable. It is also exceedingly well-crafted, lightning-paced and enormous fun to watch. (At Boston Common and in the suburbs.)

The X-Files: I Want to Believe ★ It's been six years since the TV series slumped off screens in shame (and probably twice as long since anybody cared), but Mulder and Scully are trotted out once again for a morose, low-stakes slog that owes more to modern forensic procedurals than to the duo's groundbreaking paranormal adventures. Who even wants to believe that there's a gay veterinarian living in the woods, kidnapping young women and using their body parts to keep his husband's severed head alive? Writer/director Chris Carter's glacially paced effort recycles cramped, ugly sets and is unable to wring any suspense from the nonsensical premise. David Duchovny mumbles the usual monologues while Gillian Anderson just looks unhappy to be there. Their famous sexual tension has dissolved into long-winded arguments by a boring old couple who don't even seem to like each other anymore. This is the dullest, most incompetently assembled thriller of the summer. And remember, I've seen The Happening. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)
